GAIETY THEATRE.
Lessee ... Herr BANDMANN.
MAGNETIC SUCCESS of THE WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE, or the HORRORS OF DRINK.
Already 12,000 persons have visited the Gaiety Theatre to witness the Great Play of
A WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE.
TO-NIGHT, TO-NIGHT, will be repeated
The Woman of the People, or The Horrors of Drink.
The Herald says:—"Miss Beaudet's emotional acting had a visible effect upon the audience, particularly the ladies, one of WHOM FAINTED.
Herr Bandmann played well, and looked the 'soaker' to the life. Mr. Glover was exceedingly good, and Miss Gwynne was very graceful. All the other characters were carefully played. The scenery was good, notably that of THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL.
The drama certainly points a moral, and will become popular."
The Telegraph says:—"'The Woman of the People' should have a good run, and draw, as it did last night, a CROWDED, POPULAR HOUSE."
The Evening News says:—"Miss Beaudet played the gentle, trusting wife and affectionate mother to life."
"'The Woman of the People,' the most powerful argument in favour of temperance and sobriety. Over 50,000 drunkards have been reclaimed through the medium of this marvellous play."—London Times.
To avoid the crush tickets can be purchased during the day at the Gaiety Theatre.
The Furniture supplied by W. Hamilton and Co., Globe Warehouse, Park and Castlereagh streets.
Admission—Orchestra Chairs (reserved), at Paling's, 4s; Stalls, 3s; Circle, Family Circle, 2s; ENLARGED PIT, 1s.
Doors open at 7.15, begins at 7.45. Carriages at 10.30.

TO MOTHERS, WIVES, and SISTERS.
Last Night a lady fainted and a gentleman was carried out of the GAIETY THEATRE in a fit from the effect of the marvellous acting of the "WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE."
Thousands of weak and unhappy creatures have been saved from a degraded life through this great play.
Read the Press of the World.
No friend to temperance and sobriety should fail to see this Moral and Religious Piece.

A WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE at the Gaiety is, judging by its results, the most powerful emotional and instructive drama that has been produced in Sydney for some years. The theatre is crowded, and the audience so powerfully affected that tears are general, and two instances of fainting are recorded.—The Echo, August 1, 1883.

OCULAR PROOF.
Read the following letter:—
"Gaiety Hotel, Sydney, August 1, 1883.
"To Herr D. E. BANDMANN.
"Dear Sir,—On Monday night I went to the Gaiety Theatre to witness the play of the WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE, and was so much affected by the plot of the play, and the acting of Miss BEAUDET and yourself, with the Members of your Company, that it sent me off into a fit, and I had to be taken to the Hospital.
"Gratefully yours,
"GEORGE RHODES."

THE BULLETIN, of August 4, says:
"THE WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE is the best written melodrama we have seen in Sydney for many a long year. The piece obtained A COMPLETE and PRONOUNCED SUCCESS."

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' GAZETTE, August 4th, says:
"The house is nightly crowded with large and appreciative audiences, in which the clergy largely figure. The drama is HIGHLY MORAL, and has a most elevating tendency."

SYDNEY MAIL says:
"GO TO THE GAIETY; SEE HEAR; LEARN, AND BE CONVERTED." WOMAN OF THE PEOPLE.

FRENCH PROTESTANT COLLEGE, BEDFORD, ENGLAND.
Directrice: MADAME DE MARCHOT.
In his Report for 1882, the Examiner sent by the Oxford and Cambridge Board says:—"I have examined the French Protestant College in Divinity, Latin, Euclid, Algebra, History, Geography, English Grammar, and Literature. The general results of both oral and written Examinations were highly satisfactory. I would especially commend the neatness of the writing and the correctness of the spelling in all the papers; and in the viva voce examination I was much pleased with the brightness and intelligence of the girls. The Euclid was very well done by most of the girls; the average marks in Algebra were much higher than what usually finds in boys' schools for Elementary Algebra. I am very glad that Mathematics are thus so successfully studied by the girls. I am sure it helps to make them more ready, more accurate, and more thoughtful in all their studies. The Latin shows much improvement from last year and is fair throughout. The History papers were very good, showing much mental grasp, besides a full knowledge of facts. The Grammar paper proved really too easy a test; all the girls showed a careful acquaintance with Analysis as well as Elementary Grammar. I also set a paper on Shakespeare with most satisfactory results. I am greatly pleased with the thoroughness of the work all round, and I can well judge from the appearance of the girls that they combine with their studies a due amount of recreation. I know that the College is famed for its French education, but I am glad to find that so much attention is devoted to other subjects."
The Examiner in French and German, sent by the same University Board, says:—"I am glad to report so favourably of both languages. It was really a relief, after the usual stumbling and blundering so common among boys' schools, to find such good pronunciation and such bright answering. The papers are most excellent; while everything shows great conversational acquaintance with the language. Throughout the school the goodness of the pronunciation and fluency of expression are very striking. It is rare to find such good results attained in an English school."
The List of Honours gained by the Pupils at the Cambridge Higher Examination for Women, the Oxford and Cambridge Public Schools Leaving Examination, Girton College, Cambridge Local Examination, Oxford Local Examination, Royal Academy of Music Examination, South Kensington Science and Art Examination, St. John's Ambulance Association, &c., can be had on application.

WOOL. WOOL. WOOL.

SEASON 1883-84.

HILL, CLARK, and CO., SYDNEY.

TO THE WOOL GROWERS OF NEW SOUTH WALES AND QUEENSLAND.

The rapid approach of the incoming wool season reminds us to tender our thanks for the very liberal support which has been accorded to us during past years; and while doing so we take the opportunity to solicit a continuance of the same support in the future which we have enjoyed in the past.

On referring to our circular issued last year we find that we therein anticipated a large increase in the quantity of wool which would be sold in these colonies, and the result proved that we were correct. We also predicted that the prices obtained in the colonies would be in favour of those growers who sold in the LOCAL MARKET, and this also has been fully borne out by facts.

We are also glad to say that this market all through the last season was extremely active, and the large quantity of wool sold proves that SYDNEY is fast becoming what it is destined to be in future the WOOL MARKET OF AUSTRALIA.

We have therefore no hesitation in urging upon growers the advantage of first offering their wool here, where buyers from all the manufacturing countries of Europe and America attend to supply their wants from FIRST HANDS.

Failing sales in Sydney we are prepared to ship to our London Agents, making liberal cash advances.

When sales are effected

are made on as low a scale as possible, and all wool offered in our Warehouses, and not sold, is subject only to the nominal charge of ONE SHILLING PER BALE, which covers receiving, delivering, weighing, and storage accommodation.

Our Warehouses are particularly well lighted, and are most conveniently arranged for the display of wool in any quantity, to the greatest advantage.

The most careful attention is given to the valuing of every lot both large and small, so that nothing will be sold under the full market value.

Way-bills and all further information forwarded upon application.

WHAT THE MINING JOURNAL OF LONDON says of THE OFFICIAL DIRECTORY and ALMANAC of AUSTRALIA:—

"The amount of information contained in the new edition—that for 1883—of this annual is really enormous. Calendar, nautical ephemeris, tide tables for New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia; mean places of stars, weights and measures, interest and discount tables, and various other details met with only in the best classes of almanacs are found in this; but in addition there is much that may really be almost called encyclopedia matter—a manual of gardening operations, a paper on the geographical features of the several colonies, accounts of the parliaments and government departments, a paper on the commercial intercourse and general trading prospects of Australia, and so on. BUT PERHAPS THE MOST INTERESTING SECTIONS OF THE VOLUME ARE THAT ENTITLED COMMERCE IN DETAIL, WHICH GIVES CONCISE AND ABLY WRITTEN DESCRIPTIVE NOTICES OF VARIOUS COMMERCIAL ESTABLISHMENTS, and those on the Mineral Products and Mining Laws of the several colonies. The Official Directory and Almanac of Australia is beyond comparison the best work of the kind published in Australia, and it would be difficult to find many successful competitors even in England; it reflects the highest credit upon all concerned in its production."

The Company is formed to purchase and work the rich coal deposits situate at Mittagong, parish of Jellore (within 77 miles of Sydney), New South Wales, comprising an area of 580 acres of freehold land, subject to a final payment to the New South Wales Government of 50s per acre. This amount can be paid at any time, but in the meantime it is subject to interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, equal to a yearly payment of £43 10s. The property is within four miles of Mittagong Railway Station, on the Main Southern Line, to which the Company propose to construct a railway of the same gauge, and in every way equal to the Government line, so that their rolling stock can work on the same from the top of the incline to the Mittagong Railway Station. Mr. Calder E. Oliver, C.E., the eminent surveyor, well known in connection with Messrs. C. and E. Millar's railway contracts, has surveyed the route, and estimates the cost of the railway, stationary engine, rolling stock, and all necessary plant for working the mine at £16,000. A tunnel has been driven into the seam for 80 feet, and a jump-up put in, proving that the lower seam is 15 feet thick. The upper seam has been shown to be four feet in thickness, and is divided from the lower seam by a band of sandstone two feet thick. The coal has been traced for three-quarters of a mile on each side of the tunnel, and the seam has been proved to run through the whole extent of the Company's ground. The coal opened up is of excellent quality, and Mr. Thomas, the New South Wales coal expert, and coal viewer to the Victorian Government, who is also well known to the Victorian public as a first-class judge, has reported very favourably on it, and his report is appended hereto. The special advantages claimed for this mine are:—That the coal is easily worked, the mine self-draining, and the supply of coal practically unlimited. When the mine is in full work it is anticipated that the company can raise from 800 to 1000 tons of coal per day.

Report on the Mittagong Coal Company's Property, in the parish of Jellore, county of Camden:—

The mineral field in question is situated on the western side of the Nattai River, and contains by admeasurement 580 acres of secured land. At (A) on plan herewith attached, and immediately contiguous to the northern boundary, a seam of coal crops out (vide Section on margin of plan referred to), which gives 15 feet of coal within 17 feet 8 inches of ground. It is a Splint Coal, full of rich bituminous streaks, and, to all appearances at the present face of the heading, shows a very excellent quality of coal. The bearing of the level line, or horizontal plane, is South 80 deg. west (magnetic) dipping north, 10 deg. west. The angle of dip or declination is very easy, i.e., about 1 in 50, or 1 deg. 13 min. The same seam crops out at various points along the river frontage, and is found near the southern boundary of the property under consideration, near which point (at B on plan) I would recommend the present openings to be made, as the seam can be won on both sides of the small creek shown; it will also form the junction with the proposed inclined plane, by which the underground skips, tubs, or trams will be conveyed to the terminus of the proposed branch line of railway from the Great Southern Line, of which more anon. The openings on the seam, and the rolling stock required in this department, form quite an infinitesimal item in the outlay, as the coal can be cut at a mere trifling expense owing to the free drainage. I estimate the specific gravity at 1·296, or, taking the thickness of the seam at 15 feet, the yield per acre equals 23,627 tons. This, under 580 acres, gives 13,703,660 tons of coal. Deducting one-third (⅓) for losses sustained by faults, threads, pillars, and soft coal, leaves 9,135,773 (nine million one hundred and thirty-five thousand seven hundred and seventy-three) tons available, which, if worked at the rate of 300 tons per day, of 300 working days in the year, would endure within a few fractions of 103 years, and will form the key to the extensive table-land on the west of this ground, and also a complete block to all frontages on the Nattai River, within the parallel shown, that has been taken up. There is an abundance of pit and other timber on the ground; but from the excellency of the roof over the coal, the pit timber required will not form an item of importance. Another important matter in connection with this property is the clay iron ore, immediately contiguous to the bottom coal, and which has been proved to the depth of one foot, and still continuing. This, taken in conjunction with the vast bed of red hematite ore, at the Fitzroy Ironworks, in the immediate neighbourhood, is an item of the first importance, as clay ores form an eminent ingredient in connection with the successful working and smelting of magnetic ores, and I would recommend that the ore should be at once proved and tested.

I append copy of a report by one of the most experienced smelters at home on the fluxing and treatment of "Hematite Ores," together with a few remarks of my own on this important subject, for perusal. The coal will also be invaluable for smelting purposes. The demand will, I have little doubt, be quite equal to any moderate output, without resorting to the Sydney market. The inland townships south of Mittagong will find it to their special advantage, which, coupled with the central position of the locality as regards supplying the Southern Railway, and its numerous feeders in course of construction and in embryo, also tends to enhance its value.

It is proposed to erect a stationary engine of 30 horse power at the Railway Terminus, to work the incline referred to (about 22½ chains in length). From this point to the junction with the Southern Line, a distance of 4 miles 4 chains, there are no engineering difficulties to contend with, the gradients being easy, except one short length at 1 in 30, but this is a fall in favour of the Port or loaded trucks; and the sharpest curve has a radius of 8 chains. The coal, which is of a whity-brown ash (very light), ignites freely, gives out intense and lasting heat, and I have every reason to believe that it will yield a moderate residuum of ash. I paid a flying visit to the Berrima Colliery, and although the overlying rocks appear to be identical at both places, there is no affinity whatever between the two coals, either as regards quality or appearance. At Berrima the seam is so interspersed with clay bands from the roof to the bottom coal that no effort of human ingenuity can separate the one from the other and produce a marketable commodity. The workable coal is only about 5 feet in thickness, whereas on the property under notice, the section given, although, as heretofore observed, only 80 feet from the mouth of level or tunnel, is a faithful representation of the seam and bands. The two bottom coals alone, amounting to 7 feet 9 inches in 7 feet 10½ inches of ground, will be a mine of wealth to the proprietors, for by holding in or over the intervening band the parting can be effectually removed, giving over 7 feet of coal as the result of the forward or inward drives; and when the several bords or stalls are driven to their respective boundaries, the remainder can be wrought by a system technically termed "ripping back," and on the "scouce." To summarise matters, I have no hesitation in stating this to be a first-class speculation, and will amply repay the mining adventurer.

JOHN THOMAS,
Mining Engineer and Coal Viewer.

Newcastle, June 29th, 1883.

Marrickville, Sydney, 12th June, 1883.

Sir,—In accordance with instructions received, I have made a survey and taken levels for a line of railway from a point on the Great Southern Railway, near Mittagong, to the site of the coal mine, and have further prepared a plan, section, and estimate, which I forward. The prices upon which the estimate is based are the result of actual experience in large railway contracts in Victoria, South Australia, and New South Wales, and may therefore be taken as thoroughly reliable. The length of the line is 4 miles and 4 chains, and the steepest grade is 1 in 30, which has only to be ascended by the empty trucks. Grades as steep, and in some cases steeper, are successfully worked with heavy traffic by locomotive power on the adjoining railway belonging to the Joadja Kerosene Company, on the Sydney tramways, and on railways in different parts of the world. The smallest radius is an eight-chain one, and is identical with that adopted on the Government lines, over which the ordinary rolling stock is continually working. The bridges and culverts are of no great consequence, and the cuttings can be made with little difficulty. I have carefully surveyed the route, and anticipate little or no engineering difficulty in constructing a substantial and permanent railway, suitable for the New South Wales Government rolling stock to work upon. After completing my survey, I had a look at the mine, and, from what I saw, I consider you have a most valuable property. I might also mention that everything is most favourable for the working of the mine, as the seam dipping slightly towards the incline renders traction a minimum; and as any number of drives can be put in, the output of coal is practically unlimited. I may also state that the coal I saw at the mine is, in my opinion, equal to any coal I have seen in Newcastle.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Yours obediently,
(Signed) CALDER E. OLIVER, C.E.

Long Gully, Sandhurst, 29th May, 1883.

Having visited the Coal-mine situate at Mittagong, Nattai River, I beg to report:—

There are two seams of coal traversing the property; the lower is 15 feet thick, and is divided from the upper one, which is 4 feet thick, by a band of standstone nearly 2 feet in thickness. The outcrop of the lower seam is 40 feet above the river, from which the hill rises abruptly to the height of 500 or 600 feet. A tunnel has been driven 80 feet on the floor of the lower seam. At the entrance the seam, as usual, is broken by clay veins and bands, but improves rapidly farther in, and the end of the tunnel shows a splendid face of coal the whole height of the seam. The floor rises very slowly, just sufficient for drainage, and very convenient for working, and timber of first-class quality is abundant on the property and in the neighbourhood. The works necessary to bring the coal into the market are:—A tramway tram the mouth of the tunnel to the foot of the incline, with haulage engine and screens, and a railway 4 miles long, on easy grade, to Mittagong, on the Southern Line. With these completed, the means for producing a very large quantity of coal at a minimum of cost are superior to any I have previously seen.

(Signed) JOHN A. LEWIS.

Report on a Sample of Coal received from the Mittagong Coal Company.

Museum Laboratory, Melbourne, 11th July, 1883.

In 100 parts the coal contains:—

Water	2.5
Volatile Matter	14.8
Fixed Carbon	73.0
Ash	9.7
	100.0
Sulphur	0.022 per cent.

The ash is of a very pale grey colour, and very refractory, giving a very friable clinker. The coal is an excellent household, steam, and furnace coal; and, owing to the refractory and basic character of the ash, this coal will be found to be well suited for iron smelting and foundry purposes.

J. COSMO NEWBERY.

The coal has been tried by the undermentioned firms, and their reports prove that it cannot be surpassed for steam-raising, blacksmith, smelting, or household purposes.

Swanston-street, Melbourne, 4th July, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal-mining Company.

Gentlemen,—I have much pleasure in reporting upon a quantity of coal I received for smithy purposes from your mine, situate on the Nattai River, parish of Jellore, New South Wales. I first had the forge fire cleared out of other coal, and then put a large fire down of your coal, and it burned beautifully soft and clear, and as near as possible free from dirt or clinker, which in our business is invaluable. I consider it superior to the best A. A. coal, and for purity equal to the washed or purified coal of the A. A. Co.'s Mine. Hoping this quality of coal will soon be placed on this market,

I am, Sir, &c.,
DANIEL WHITE,
Carriage Builder to his Excellency the Marquis of Normanby, K.C.M.G.

Bouverie-street, Melbourne, 4th July, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal Company, New South Wales.

Gentlemen,—We beg to inform you that we have made a trial of the sample of coal sent us, and find it far superior in quality to the Newcastle coal we are now using for steam purposes, and are of opinion that, could the same be placed on our market at a reasonable figure, it would be a boon to all manufacturers.

Yours very truly,
JOS. NICHOLSON and CO.,
Implement Makers.

Victoria Foundry, Melbourne, June 27, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal-mining Company.

Gentlemen,—We have received a quantity of coal from your mine, situate at Mittagong, near the River Nattai, N.S.W., and have pleasure in reporting as follows:—

We find the quality excellent, it being nearly smokeless, and burning clearly with a strong heat. We consider it an economical coal, well suited for household or engine purposes.

Yours truly,
PHILLIPS, M'WALTER, and CHAMBERS.

Victoria-street, Melbourne.

To the Mittagong Coal-mining Company, Nattai River.

Gentlemen,—Having received a sample of your coal, I have tested it for smithy purposes, and beg to report:—It is a first-class smithy coal, entirely free from sulphur, with very little smoke, throwing out a beautiful heat. It is particularly adapted for light work, having a splendid body in it, and another great recommendation is that it is very lasting. I put on a fire of it at 2 o'clock, and it lasted until 4, working hard all the time. I shall be glad to see this coal on the market.

WILLIAM M'INDOE,
General Blacksmith.

80, Leicester-street, Carlton, 4th July, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal-mining Company.

I have given the coal sent by you a fair trial, and it is a first-rate coal for baking purposes, not having any smoke, and leaving nothing behind but a white ash. I think it would suit us as well as wood if the price is any way reasonable. Hoping we will soon have a supply,

Yours truly,
J. EDMONDS, Baker.

Steam Silver, Electroplate, and Nickel Works,
29, Little Collins-street East, Melbourne, 9th July, 1883.

Gentlemen,—According to your request, we have tried the coal from the Mittagong Coal-mining Company supplied by you, and we find it in every respect equal to the A. S. N. Company's coal.

We are, dear Sir, yours obediently,
STOKES and MARTIN.

Victoria-street, Melbourne, 10th July, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal-mining Company, Nattai River, N.S.W.

Gentlemen,—I received a small quantity of coal from the above Company, which I have tested, with the following result:—I find the coal of excellent quality, free from smoke and sulphur, and consider it a beneficial coal for my work as a steel tool maker and general blacksmith.

Yours truly,
JOHN LETHAM.

Melbourne, 12th July, 1883.

The Mittagong Coal Company, New South Wales.

Gentlemen,—We have tried your coal for steam and blacksmiths' work, and find it equal in quality to any coal we have used. Yours, &c.,

JOHNSON and CO.,
Tyne Foundry, Yarra-bank.

Melbourne, 12th July, 1883.

To the Mittagong Coal Company.

From the trial of the Company's coal I found it very suitable and profitable for steaming purposes. It is excellent for light smiths' work, but for heavy forgings it seems to be rather free. A larger quantity would have been a more satisfactory test.

ARTHUR HOPE,
Yarra Bank, South Melbourne.

The Provisional Directors believe the New South Wales Government will be large consumers of the coal for locomotive purposes; and as the main Southern Line is in direct communication with Goulburn, Wagga Wagga, Albury, Wodonga, &c., it is anticipated that a large local demand will spring up, and any surplus stocks can be easily disposed of in Sydney (77 miles distant). Here the New South Wales Government have constructed a line down to the wharves, by which the company could supply steamships, &c., at a lower figure than the Newcastle companies, and with profitable results to the shareholders.

Competent mining engineers estimate that the coal can be hewn at a cost of 2s 3d per ton, and, as an additional 9d per ton will truck it in the Government trucks, it is obvious that on a moderate output of 300 tons per day (reckoning 300 working days per year) the profits of the Company must be very large, even although the coal is put on the market at a price to defy competition. The very lowest profit it is necessary to calculate on is 5s per ton, giving, on the very moderate output mentioned above, a clear profit of 45 per cent. on the nominal capital. In many instances the profit will be much greater, as at Mittagong coal is costing the New South Wales Government 18s per ton, and at many other points on the main Southern line even higher prices can be obtained. Any surplus stock (costing the Company 3s in the Government trucks) can be forwarded to Sydney for an additional 5s per ton; and if sold at the extremely low figure of 13s per ton (the price of much inferior coal to this is 15s per ton) would still leave 5s per ton profit, thus proving that stock need never accumulate for want of a ready market. As the demand for coal is steadily increasing year by year, and prices necessarily advance in proportion, this mine must be extremely valuable. The proprietors are so sanguine of the success of the mine that they have taken shares for their property, and have applied, in addition for two-fifths of the contributing shares offered to the public.

Twenty-five Thousand Shares, fully paid-up, are reserved for the proprietors, who have applied for 10,000 shares out of the 25,000 remaining, on the same terms as the balance of 15,000 shares is now offered to the public, viz., 2s 6d per share on application, 2s 6d per share on allotment, and the balance in calls of 2s 6d per share, at intervals of not less than one month, until 15s per share is called up. It is improbable that any further calls on capital will be required, as it is anticipated that the mine will be in full working order and dividend-paying before this.

The three Plans annexed show the ground, the mine, the seams of coal, the incline, the proposed line, and the different townships on the Great Southern Line, or in direct railway communication with it.

Applications for shares can be made to the brokers, or to the Secretary pro tem., Mr. D. M'INTYRE, 35, Victoria-street, Melbourne.

CONTINENTAL GOSSIP.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT "STELLA.")

[The following letter of our correspondent is dated previous to the one which appeared in the Herald of June 27:—]

PARIS, MAY 9.

The journals of this centre of light and civilisation have been making merry over the remark of M. Grevy, who, having inquired of an artistic celebrity what he thought of this year's Salon, and received the reply of the said celebrity, to the effect that there "were a good many good paintings, but none of surpassing merit," exclaimed, with evident satisfaction, "Ah! a truly Republican exhibition, where all attain to a fair average without being overshadowed by any colossal superiority!"

Such a remark, even from President Grevy, seemed to the general public too absurd to be anything but a quib or a canard, but subsequent investigations have proved that it was really made by the present head of the French Government. The monarchists of all shades and schools are delighted to learn that so heavy a blow should have been dealt to the form of government they execrate by the present chief of that Government; the Republicans are indignant that their favourite formula should be held up to the world as being especially the regime of the common-place, and naturally inimical to superiority of talent and of production. The fact is that every year since the disastrous downfalls of 1870 the annual fine arts exhibitions have been constantly deteriorating. Each has been poorer, less interesting, than its predecessor, and the one recently opened is the poorest we have yet had. It contains many charming genre pieces, several good landscapes, and a few excellent portraits, but the immense majority of the paintings exhibited are calculated only to deepen the spectator's regret that so much effort should have been directed to the wasting of time, canvas, and paint, instead of being turned to the various manual occupations that constitute the real wealth-producers of the world.

While the quality of French art is thus steadily running down, the quantity of French artistic production is as steadily increasing. The enormous amount of paintings demanding exhibition renders it impossible to place the greater number in a good light; hence bickerings, heart burnings, and angers almost as numerous as the thousands of paintings that get hung, somehow, in the long suite of rooms appropriated to this annual show. Two of the angry artists, who conceived themselves to be sacrificed by the way in which their works were hung, entered a practical protest against the fate of their productions, one by blackening his painting, the other by cutting his canvas bodily out of its frame. After much negotiation between the two artists and the jury, they have been brought to a less irate state of mind. The blackened picture has been cleaned, and the missing canvas has been restored to its empty frame. The fact is that the quantity of paintings admitted by the jury is enormously in excess of the possibilities of the walls. To hang all these works in the proper light, and at the proper height, would require, as has been wittily set forth in answer to the multitudinous anglers excited by the hanging of the vast majority of the pictures, the erection of a hoarding, on both sides of the Avenue des Champs Elysees, down the Avenue de Neuilly, and as far as the Rondpoint of Courbevoie.

The present Salon was informally opened by the visit of M. and Mme. Grevy, accompanied by their daughter and son-in-law, and a few of their official intimates. The Presidential party was received by the authorities of the exhibition, conducted through the long suite of picture-lined rooms, and then sat down to an excellent lunch provided for the occasion.

The two sons of the Prince of Wales, Princes Albert Victor and George, who have been staying in Lausanne, with their tutor and suite, having gone home for their Easter holidays, it was found that they had been kept so closely to their general studies that they have made but little progress in the acquirement of conversational French. Their cosmopolitan father, who speaks French and other continental languages in perfection, has therefore decided to relax the discipline to which the two youths have hitherto been subjected, and to allow them to visit some of the leading families of Lausanne, on condition that they shall speak no other tongue but French. Twelve of the principal families of Lausanne have now the honour of receiving the young princes, and are said to be charmed by their frankness and simplicity, open dispositions, genial temper, and manly bearing. The presence of the English princes seems to have exercised an attractive influence on English tourists in Switzerland, and the English colony at Lausanne is more numerous at this time than it ever was before.

M. Elisee Reclus, the eminent geographer and anarchist, who recently married his two daughters after his own fashion, with no ceremony either civil or religious, has left his Swiss home for Turkey, of which he is writing a geography.

The French artists and public are naturally indignant at the proposed action of the American Government in reference to "the protection" of the native productions of pictures and statuary by the trebling of the duties levied on art-objects imported from the Old World. The American artists here are as much excited and as angry as their French confreres; a strong remonstrance has been drawn up, is being signed, and is to be presented in Congress against the proposed increase of duties to be levied on the works of foreign artists.

"Exhibitions" are now so much the order of the day that a special journal would be needed to keep the run of them; all those now open (and they are legion) seem to be equally successful.

Upwards of 25,000 visitors have entered the Exhibition buildings at Zurich during the first three days after the opening. The metallurgical, watchmaking, and jewellery branches are magnificently represented. The textile industries of the Alpine Republic have made great progress within the last few years. In the map department visitors may trace the efforts of cartographers from the 15th century to the present day; the greatest chef d'œuvre of the map-show being the famous Dufour map, on which General Dufour worked incessantly for 25 years. The number of exhibitors is 5302, of whom 1029 are in the machinery department, and 608 in the art sections.

The exhibition at Amsterdam, with its Japanese treasures, is equally fine. The Fishery Exhibition in London promises to be even more interesting than its rivals, from the immense number and variety of valuable materials pressed into the service of the main idea.

We have had plenty of royal and otherwise titled people here during the past week; among others the Duke and Duchess of Albany, who have been spending some time at Fontainebleau, and are now gone on to Amsterdam.

Princess Dolgorouki, morganatic widow of the late Czar, is here with her three beautiful children — Prince George and the Princesses Olga and Catherine. Princess Frederika, of Hanover, with her husband, Baron Pawell-Rammingen, who have been travelling in the Pyrenees, are also here.

Various cricket club matches, regattas, processions, &c., have come off.

The famous pilgrimage to Argenteuil, a village on the Seine, near this city, has just taken place with the usual ceremonies. The tunic which, according to tradition, was worn by Jesus Christ, and presented by Charlemagne to his sister, who was Abbess of the Priory of Argenteuil, is now on view, and will remain exposed for the edification of the faithful until the 14th instant. The Papal Nuncio celebrated High Mass at at the opening of the visitation, and the closing ceremony will be presided over by the Bishop of Versailles. The annual fete in memory of Jeanne d'Arc has been celebrated at Orleans with unusual splendour, owing to the presence of the Nuncio; the clergy and functionaries of the town going in procession to the different places illustrated by the victories of the Maid of Orleans, and a vast concourse of people having flocked to the town, which was decked with banners and garlands, and the scene of much banquetting and various amusements in honour of the day.

That indefatigable cutter of canals, M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, who "multiplies himself" in journeyings, speeches, conferences, &c. in support of his projects (and who is about to make a tour in the north of France to study the proposed canal from Paris to Boulogne, with a branch to Lille), has just had a narrow escape of a domestic tragedy. He frequently rides out accompanied by a goodly number of his children (he has ten), he himself on horseback, his children on ponies, the curious and pretty procession attracting much attention from passers. A few mornings ago M. Lesseps, on his usual steed, and five of his children on ponies, were coming back from an early ride in the Bois de Boulogne, when a dogcart, the horse of which had bolted, dashed among the party before they had time to draw aside. One pony was knocked down, and the little girl who rode it was thrown to the ground, where she lay stunned by the fall. She was carried to a house near by, and was soon restored to consciousness. It is hoped that she has not received any injury, as she was able to remount her diminutive charger and ride home. M. Lesseps, who doats on his children, was naturally much alarmed at the time, his two ideas—the only ones over which his great age seems to exert no deadening effect—being his canals and his children.

The renowned John Brown, whose recent death has deprived Queen Victoria of a servant so devoted as to have been a friend, in his line has a pendant in the person of Anton Hanna Kampf, who, after beginning his career as confidential valet to the young Duke of Reichstadt—which post he retained until the death of the ill-fated "King of Rome,"—was placed in the same capacity in the service of the Archduke Franz Josef, and has remained in the same position till the present day. The present Emperor of Austria was only two years and a-half old when Anton Hanna Kampf was thus placed about his service, just fifty years ago; and this faithful and devoted servant has never, through the whole of this long period, quitted his Imperial master for a single instant, or taken a single leave of absence. The Emperor, it is hardly necessary to add, is deeply attached to his ancient servitor, whose black coat is studded with orders and medals; he has bestowed on him the coveted title of "Austrian Herald," and all the foreign sovereigns have given him crosses and orders. M. Hanna Kampf has had the rare good sense not to attempt to be anything but the devoted attendant of his master, though the affection and confidence which he has gained from the latter would have enabled him to acquire political influence had he desired to do so. This old servant, oddly enough, resembles the old Kaiser of Germany so perfectly that it would be difficult to distinguish them, if dressed alike; so that people admitted to the Imperial dressing-room for the first time have been startled by apparently beholding the German Emperor employed in helping forward the toilet of his Austrian Majesty!

When Napoleon III. had his famous interview with the Austrian Emperor at Salzburg, in 1867, he received Hanna Kampf in private audience, being desirous of obtaining full details respecting the life and death of his unfortunate young cousin. Hanna Kampf, having gratified the French Emperor's desire, showed him various souvenirs of the young Prince carefully preserved by him, and comprising a lock of his fair curly hair, some shirt buttons, and other little personal belongings, which he offered to the Emperor, who gladly accepted the gift.

The Empress of Austria and the ex-Queen of Naples are rejoicing over the recovery of their sister, the Countess de Train, whose life was despaired of.

MAY 18.

The French Government would seem to be entering upon a course of policy with regard to semi-civilised countries that may be expected to act as a counterpoise to the domestic embarrassments with which it is confronted. The Chamber, after one of the most animated debates of the present session, has given an immense majority to the "colonising" projects, which will doubtless give to France, in a very short time, a sufficient amount of international difficulties to distract the attention of the public from the difficulties so rapidly growing up in the country itself. It is remarkable that, in proportion as an "energetic assertion of her rights and will in the acquisition of colonies" is advocated by the rulers of the hour, the tone of the press and public of La Belle France becomes distinctly less and less friendly towards Great Britain, which Power is accused—first, of having already possessed itself of all the best countries for colonising; and secondly, of grudging to France the founding of colonies in the second-rate spots, which are all that greedy and perfidious Albion has left for France to take possession of. The main consolation that France's neighbours may derive from the new action of France in the "colonising" field is the strong probability that the more recklessly the latter rushes into the work of taking possession of Oriental and African countries, the less likely is she to find leisure and means for troubling the Western World.

The sending of M. Waddington to Russia as the Special Envoy of the Republic at the approaching coronation has given deep offence to the advanced Radicals, who hold sway in the municipal body of this town. The large sum voted for the outfit and journey of M. Waddington, General Pittié, and the French mission, the splendid vehicles and horses with which these gentlemen are to figure among the other envoys and guests, are provoking bitter complaints among the masses and their leaders, and all the details of the arrangements are angrily criticised. The French Deputation will occupy three splendid carriages that will figure with distinction among the innumerable vehicles of the coronation procession. Two of these gala-carriages have been purchased from Marshal MacM'Mahon, who used them when he was President of the French Republic; the third is lent by M. Grevy, who would seem to have but slight need of so splendid a coach. The horses, eight in number—a pair of blacks and three pairs of bays—have been hired for the occasion. Two of the carriages have the French national arms on the panels, and the third has the arms of M. Waddington, containing, curiously enough, several fleur-de-lys; the escutcheon is surmounted with an arm, the hand of which holds a battle-axe, and the motto below is Loyaute (Loyalty). The harness, made by Durr, is ornamented with the same arms in massive silver; the trimmings, blue and white or tri-colour, are of silver braid; the liveries are of blue cloth with silver buttons. M. Waddington takes with him an usher from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and a staff of footmen, mostly borrowed from the Elysee. One of the coachmen is the well-known Leroy, who was formerly in the service of Prince Napoleon and General Fleury, and accompanied them in all their embassies. The others are M. Waddington's private coachmen, one of them being an Englishman. Gambetta's famous cook, Trompette (whose skill undoubtedly assisted in developing in the late Tribune the morbid corpulence that proved fatal to him), accompanies the Embassy to Moscow as chef, and will no doubt brilliantly sustain the glory of the French name in the culinary line, as M. Waddington is to give sundry diplomatic and complimentary dinners during his stay in the ancient capital of the Czars, unique in its way.

Admiral Jaure, the representative of France as a maritime power at the approaching ceremony, is taking a splendid coupe, specially built for the French "salt," by one of the leading carriage-builders of this capital, at a cost of £400.

M. Waddington is an accomplished courtier, and a very agreeable man of the world. He is personally liked wherever he goes, and is of a very conciliatory disposition. No one is surprised, therefore, to learn that, on his passage through Berlin, he was cordially received by the Emperor, the Imperial family, and the all-powerful Prince-Chancellor of the German Empire.

The Alimentary Exhibition is dividing the favour of visitors with the Salon. Every substance employed as food, whether solid or liquid, and the various appliances used in their production and preparation, naturally form the staple of the show; but cooking utensils, glass and porcelain, linen, household furniture, and treatises on all branches connected with the main subject of the gathering are represented largely. Flowers, specimens of "mosaiculture" (the art of producing mosaics in beds of coloured flowers), specimens of pies, of Victorian ale, of cider, wine, milk, butter, cheese, eggs, &c., add to the attractiveness of the display. Consumers of snails can see real live escargots crawling along the vine leaves, on which, alone, the best kind feed. Confectioners and cakemakers, the benevolent geniuses that preserve fruit and "conserve" vegetables, are also well to the front. A very good restaurant in the centre of the display is largely patronised, people lunching there with great apparent zeal and satisfaction.

If the splendour of a wedding were an unfailing herald of the happiness to be of the couple thus glorified, the two recent royal marriages would be of the happiest. The two weddings that have just taken place in the Bavarian Royal Family have given great satisfaction in Bavaria, Madrid, and Rome; the fetes in Munich having been especially brilliant, and that artistic city having surpassed itself in the splendour of the bunting, addresses, serenades, and illuminations it has lavished on its welcome of the Heir Apparent, Prince Ludovic, and his lovely young Spanish bride, and of the golden-haired sister of the former, with the Duke of Genoa, brother of the Queen of Italy. The dreamy King, as usual, went off to a mountain castle, to be out of the way of the wedding festivities, but he came back to his capital in time to give a Court banquet in honour of his new sister-in-law. It was held in the splendid Barbarossa Saal, and served on the splendid Niebelungla service of gold plate, and with a floral decoration of no fewer than 6000 pots of glorious flowers, disseminated through the rooms. At the dinner itself, every dish was wreathed with myrtle and hyacinths, and served by the Court pages, youths of noble family, in exquisite costumes of blue and silver, who "do the attitudes" of State ceremonials even better than the court ladies themselves. It was remarked, as a wonderful proof of the effect of the charms of Princess Paz on the shy and wilful king that his romantic Majesty not only led the Spanish charmer to her carriage, but actually kissed her hand on parting! There is no doubt of the fulness of the Papal benediction bestowed by Leo XIII. on the daughter of Queen Isabella and her husband; but speculation is rife as to the share of blessing which the Pontiff may have given to the Duke of Genoa; the Prince, as a member of the Italian Royal family, sharing in the excommunication pronounced on King Victor Emmanuel and his relatives. It appears that Princess Isabella, now Duchess of Genoa, received a private double-distilled benediction by the Pope on her marriage, but Duke Thomas had to content himself with the perfunctory sentence inserted in the Papal dispensation permitting the marriage (the new couple are cousins), which sentence, being a matter of rote, and written by a clerkly pen, can hardly be held to convey any special spiritual unction.

The Bavarian couple will live in the neighbourhood of Munich, and the Italian couple will spend next winter in Naples, where Duke Thomas takes the head of the Marine Department, and where splendid festivities are already being prepared in their honour. English residents in Italy take especial interest in the Duke of Genoa, his education having been conducted in England under the auspices of the apostle of "sweetness and light," Mr. Mathew Arnold.

A wedding of a humbler character, but creating as much interest in its narrower sphere, is that of the rosiere, crowned and married on Whit Sunday at Nanterre. That ancient village is so intimately associated with the conversion of France to Christianity that religious pomp enters largely into every local celebration at that place. It was the birthplace of Saint Genevieve, the shepherdess patron saint of Paris, who converted the Frankish King Clovis from idolatry. A grand mass in music ushered in the celebration, after which the civil ceremony took place at the Town Hall. This year's receipient of the prize is a young sempstress of nineteen, the support of her invalid mother. Her godmother, as a testimony to the young woman's superior worth, presented her with a gold watch and chain, a handsome ring, and a gift of £20 in money.

The most remarkable peculiarity of the "fashions" of the gay world at this time is the lavish employment of fruit as well as flowers in the adornment of the feminine toilet. Dresses are covered with flowers, bonnets and hats are laden with cherries, currants, apricots, &c. A fashionable hat of black straw has been seen trimmed with a crooked stick, that seemed to have been broken from an apple tree, and that bore just two green half-ripe apples, one of which rose just above the crown of the hat at the side, while the other rested below it just at the ear. There was no other trimming, not even a few apple leaves—just the crooked branch and the two apples, so perfectly imitated that they might have figured undetected in a basket of real apples. The bunches of apricots and cherries are so "natural" that one is inclined to bite into them to see if they are not the fresh and juicy primeurs they look to be. A very elegant half-wreath was composed of large gold buttercups, fringed under the flowers by a line of hazel nuts, mounted on long flexible stems, equally elegant and unnatural.

It is said that little bunches of radishes, carrots, and leeks are "coming out" as trimmings; one need not, therefore despair of seeing cabbages and cauliflowers figuring as pompons on the head gear of beauty. And that result being attained, who shall say what will be the limit of attainment in the same line? Why should not a tiny "rosbif," or a pretty little couple of fowls nicely browned, or enveloped in a delicate rasher of bacon, an artistic pie, cakes, pats of butter, lobster, or a shining garland of sprats, be made to figure in the ornamenting of hats and bonnets. Already, at the great festival just given at the Trocadero, for an excellent charity, the leading ladies appeared as baskets of flowers; the basket being represented by the corsage of the wearer, made of gold, of silver, of fancy straw, riband, braid, or even of rushes, but forming a basket filled with flowers, from which the wearer's head and neck emerged as though "to the manner born." One was a basket of violets, another of pinks, another of primroses, geraniums, &c. One very lovely woman was roses, in a basket of gold and silver braid. All the dresses matched the flowers selected by the wearers.

TAMATAVE AND ANTANANARIVO.

The Secretary to the Malagasy Special Embassy has supplied the following to the representative of the Press Association:—

"The embassy itself received no separate account, and do not expect any now that Tamatave is closed to the Queen, for communication. On or about May 20, Admiral Pierre arrived off Madagascar, after having reduced Majunga, on the opposite side of the island. Here he must have anchored and despatched an ultimatum to the Queen of the Hovas, who is at Antananarivo, 200 miles inland. The latter town is the capital of the island, the only mode of communication thence to the coast being by carriers and bearers. This journey would occupy at least five days, and therefore it is to be assumed that some delay must have arisen before her Majesty answered the ultimatum.

"The Malagasy envoys were cognisant that her Majesty would refuse any ultimatum of such a nature, and are not at all surprised at the bombardment of their main port by the French. They learned by the last mail that the bombardment of Tamatave would not be resisted by the Hova troops, and stringent orders to that effect were given a month since to the commandant and governor of that garrison. The Queen had withdrawn most of the troops to Antananarivo, leaving about 200 armed soldiers to maintain order at Tamatave. There is only one mud fort at the mouth of the harbour, with bastions, behind which are mounted three or four old pattern muzzle-loading cannon of unknown date. These, if manned properly, might have done some damage, but under the order of the Queen no return was to be made to the fire of the French.

"Most of the large buildings around the landing quays are stores and manufactories of British subjects, mostly from India. There are also a number of American houses. Nearly all the import and export trade of the island finds its way to this port. The trade there is very large, and the custom-house duties are the main supply of revenue to the Queen. Having cut Antananarivo off from this port, no communication can be made from the capital to foreign countries, except by passing vessels along the south coast, where a vessel is seldom seen. The investment of Tamatave has cut off all supplies to the interior of the country, but there is sufficient food at Antananarivo to meet a siege of several months if the French determine to march upon that capital. There are over 6000 well-disciplined troops, armed for the most part with Remington rifles, in the fortifications at the disposal of their sovereign. They are a most loyal people, and will fight to the last. It is not known what troops Admiral Pierre has at his command; but it will take an army at least five months to march across the dangerous interior of the island and successfully reduce Antananarivo. Until this is done the Hovas will not submit to the demands of the French, and it is hoped that the foreign countries who are most interested in the trade with the island may see fit to interfere to prevent the complete destruction of a trade which it has taken years to build up.

"The three towns mentioned in the Admiral's despatch—Toulepo, Mahambo, and Tenerive—as having been destroyed are small villages without much trade, to the south of Tamatave, and are insignificant. Their bombardment was a most wanton and cruel work, for they could not possibly have offered any opposition to the French commander.

"The reported excitement of the natives on the investment of Tamatave by the French was to be expected, as reports had no doubt previously reached that town of the actions of the French at Majunga and neighbouring towns. They feared for their property, their houses, and their lives. A state of siege was no doubt proclaimed to give the French more power to completely invest the town.

"It is believed that many British subjects could not find asylum on board the British men-of-war, the Dryad and Dragon, as they are small ships, and not capable of accommodating the great number who trade and are domiciled in Tamatave. If these English subjects were not safely brought off the land previous to the bombardment, many must have been killed. The destruction to British property must have been great, and English trade must have suffered to a like extent.

"It is most unlikely now that any native description of the investment of Tamatave can be supplied to the Malagasy envoys, as their main port is in French hands. The Ambassadors will come to London immediately, and will again exert themselves to get English opinion to help in the amicable settlement of the Franco-Malagasy question."

THE cocoas commonly sold are mixed with starch, which renders them thick, heavy, and indigestible. Cadbury's Cocoa Essence is genuine, and is therefore a light and refreshing beverage, [illegible].—Lancet.

NEW ZEALAND NOTES.

BY J. H.

XVI.—CHALKY INLET.

The Sounds of the West Coast are mostly in that blessed condition in which a country is said to be that has no history. There is, however, a little story connected with this Preservation Inlet, which we are now about to leave. It is told us by Post-captain Malcolm, mentioned before as being with us as a guide and general referee. Such supercargo character had been allotted to him because that he had, as captain, conveyed more than one party of tourists through these Sounds. When here in 1877, in the s.s. Hawea, of which he was captain, he found the steamer leaving Preservation Inlet one passenger short of the number she had brought into it.

The missing man had, with several others, gone ashore, or on what here stands for shore, the preceding evening. It was not, however, noticed that he had not returned as the others had done. His absence was, at last, only reported by his cabin companion, who by that time had come to consider that no stay at a friend's house on shore could in this case account for the empty bunk. The Hawea dropped anchor again on such report being made, and for the rest of the day search was made all about for the missing one. It was continued also throughout the next night, but with no success. The firing of cannon by day and the sending up of rockets by night availed nothing. Even the steam-whistle and the fog-horn, the discordance of which would have awakened Rip Van Winkle from his sleep in the mountains, produced no effect upon this laggard. That he must have been drowned in the deep, deep waters of the Sound was the conclusion to which most of his fellow-passengers had by that time come, and with that idea Captain Malcolm was urged to leave Preservation Inlet the next morning.

A "forlorn hope" party, so to call it, determined, however, on one more trial in a search of the bush on the hillsides. It was puzzling indeed to make out how anyone could be lost in such bush, where one would have but to follow gravitation's law and tumble downwards to reach the shore or the water. The labours of these volunteers were not thrown away, however, and this inlet kept up the character implied by its name. The lost one was found. He had reached the top of a hill, but had, shut in by the thick foliage around him, gone down on the wrong side when wishing to return. He lost his way altogether in the dense vegetation into which he now wandered, and then lost his head. He had, shut in as he was in gloomy seclusion between hills and mountains, neither seen rockets nor heard cannon. The exhaustion of two nights and a day of such wanderings required something like 48 hours of continuous sleep to bring him again to a lively state.

Signs of a previous visitor to this Sound were visible, not in the usual inscription of name and date in wood or stone, but in a red and white flag tied to a fern. It proved to be placed over a flour barrel in which some surplus provisions had been left. "Prospectors," said the captain in explanation; and such was likely enough, for these pioneers have visited all the Sounds in turn. Not much to their profit could apparently be found here. The soil seemed but as a thin deposit of decayed vegetation, resting on a rocky foundation. It had been formed in this way:—Moss and lichens had grown on these rocks, generated who shall say how, but fed by vapours from the waters below and the rains from above. In the moss so nurtured there came to grow, in time, plants and creepers, to which followed ferns and bushes. The decay and death of what so grew left deposits of vegetable soil as nourishment for what was to follow, and so the natural development of vegetation went on. Trees had found at last a sufficient depth of soil in which to take root, and thus developed, decayed, and died. Their trunks, rotting with time, provided further thickness to the soil. It was curious to notice that such soil had become in some places too top-heavy for the little hold it had on the steep rock whereon it rested. Hence the hillsides of the Sound are streaked with landslips thus caused. Here and there a trickling cascade, or more full flowing waterfall, help further to vary and variegate the scene. The edges left by these landslips show but about two or three feet of earth as all that has been deposited on the rocky and repellant sides of these hills. Wind or water had in some cases loosened this soil, and when once dislodged, with what grew upon it, the avalanche so made had set free, in like way, all below it—tumbling everything it met with into the deep waters waiting below. These landslips are many, and seldom seen of less than 50 feet in width, and some hundreds in length. Seen from the water they seem in the distance but as streaks left by time on the face of nature.

Among the birds that have been brought on board as trophies of the fowler's labours, are several worthy of note. First mention may be made of the kaka, or New Zealand parrot, a bird of dusky plumage, and no rival in appearance to the parrots of Australia. Then we have specimens of the kiwi, a small apteryx in its kind, and one that burrows about in the earth for its food. Another contribution is the moko, a bird of greenish hue; and another is the chicken-like weka. These be of the land birds. But the waters have also contributed feathered specimens. Of such is a diminutive but pretty gull, being the bird of which most is seen in the Sounds. A small-sized duck has also been brought down, as also what is described as a crested grebe. We shall see any rare specimen afterwards, in a preserved state, for such we hear is the intention of more than one of our naturalists.

From Preservation Inlet the Tarawera runs out to sea, turning shortly afterward into Dark Cloud Sound—better known now as Chalky Inlet. It has got that name from the chalky cliffed island seen at its entrance—a peculiarity of a more permanent nature than is merely a dark cloud. Following this chalky island is another called Long Passage Island, dividing the Sound into two branches or arms, named Cunaris and Edwardson—the first running on for five, and the other for six miles. Anchorage can only be found here, as with the lately visited Sound at the head of it. Arrived here, boats are soon let down and filled with explorers, carrying their tackle and guns, nets, rods, spears, baskets, and bags. All such as these are intent on that pleasure which the cynical Frenchman would have it that Englishmen could only find when trying to kill something.

Even that Frenchman would have been mollified had he seen the vengeance that here followed the sportsman. It was Nemesis in the most diminutive form, but none the less effective. Hamlet described Polonius as being "not where he eats, but where he is eaten," and it is questionable whether our sportsmen were not made quite as much the subject of sport. Let everybody speak for themselves, however, for we do not all suffer alike from the same causes. Speaking for myself, I never knew all the evils that attend being thin-skinned until now, when I get experience enough in that matter for a lifetime. My new knowledge is acquired in an open boat, which is drawn up for the time under some bushes, over the sides of which boat I am pulling up fish about as fast as I can get the line fresh baited and thrown in again. Bound am I to have to pay somehow for such fun, as I have had to do for most other delights.

"The labour we delight in physics pain," and, so excitedly engaged, I am quite oblivious of a very small black fly—half the size of a mosquito, or one-eighth of the size of the common black house fly, known to our milk jugs and sugar basins. This little creature, dwelling in the solitude of these Sounds, can know nothing of humanity nor of the qualities of the human skin. Notwithstanding this ignorance, these small mites of flies make for every exposed part of one and there settle—and suck. No bulldog sticks tighter when it once takes hold than does this little fly. Nothing frightens it from its settlement, and its sucking to which it adheres until death doth it part. Such parting is only made when a hand is brought down on it, and the thing is thus smashed up and dissipated in fragments that cannot be seen.

While so fishing I see these little flies covering my hands and wrists, and feel them about my eyes and ears, and everywhere on face and neck. Pulling up the fish I neglect the flies, which have thus time to make themselves at home before I can find leisure to brush them off. No time to think about little flies when fish of all sorts—blue, pink, and mottled—are giving such good sport. The sport is intensified occasionally by a young shark swallowing the fish that has been hooked before the latter can be drawn up. An additional hand is then wanted to the line before his sharkship can be pulled up and landed, with the fish and the hook and a length of the line inside him. Such exciting sport allowed for no thinking of flies as an annoyance. Such things could, of course, be brushed off when one's hands were less occupied.

On a ramble afterwards upon what little there was of the shore I found the attentions of these flies greater than when in the boats. Here was time, however, for talking about them which did not happen in the busy fishing boat. The little black thing is, I now learn, called the sandfly, but so called for reasons I cannot discover. Certainly not for any sand that is hereabout, for nothing of that sort is to be found in the Sounds. We take these flies from the shore and from the boats, on board the steamer with us, and those that have settled on our coats and not on the skin, now detach themselves, and make a round of the vessel. It is this fly, the sole visitor to the ship, that the shores supply, but it proved to make up in itself for a host that might have come. The moa, as a bird of New Zealand, made up in its time in size and singularity for all the other feathered bipeds that were wanting. And so with the sandfly, the smallest living thing in these West Coast Sounds, and yet the one that made itself most felt and longest remembered.

For the sandfly makes its mark, and a more memorable one by far than that of the mosquito. It comes upon one all unheralded by any buzzing or noise, and its visits are in the daytime only. Though they rest from their labours by night, they have done enough, these little flies, to drive rest away from those bitten by them. The bite is succeeded in a few hours by a small pimple, that will draw attention to itself for several days and nights to come. It is this pimple, the mound which the dead sandfly has reared to its memory.

Many animated things in New Zealand prove themselves adaptable to change of habit. The Maori takes to the food and drink introduced by the European in preference to that used aforetime. The seagulls also are found here, leaving the sea and following the plough and harrow of the husbandman to feed on worms. In a land where nature's instincts are thus set aside, and other tastes adopted, it is not perhaps wonderful to find flies doing similarly. The little sandfly is now seen showing a taste for the human skin and what it can extract thence that must be quite novel as nourishment to it. No animal life exists in the Sounds on which this fly could feed. It must of necessity have lived upon vegetation or upon salt water supplies, for of other food there was none. The birds are all too much protected by feathers, and the fish would be quite out of this fly's way. The vegetarian, for such the sand fly must have been, changes its food thus suddenly on the coming of man. It fastens down at once upon him as if his like had always supplied its sustenance.

Captain Cook, that great minded mariner, notices these sandflies as among his many discoveries hereabout. They were, in truth, most probably his earliest discovery in the Sounds. It is as nearly certain as anything else in the world that these flies drew their first blood from Cook and his crew. They were, these seamen, most likely the first human beings to visit these solitudes. He writes about them that he found them to be "most virulent, and that it was with the greatest difficulty that the observations necessary to a survey of the place could be made." I could understand his trouble from what I now know of these flies. When one of them is travelling over the face, the light little thing, whose footsteps are all unfelt, will wander into the eye, and stick there. Such was, as Cook found, very much in the way of himself and his men taking the necessary astronomical observations.

H.M.S. Acheron, some five years back, verified all Cook's surveys of these Sounds, and her captain has something to say also on the subject of sandflies. It is much to the same effect, but perhaps a little more strongly worded. The Acheron's records say that "the ship's officers were compelled to take refuge from the torments of these flies among the thicker foliage found inland, to which these pests, strangely enough, do not penetrate." It would seem from this testimony that the sandfly hangs about the shore line, whether there be sand there or not. The officers of the Acheron did not escape much by going into the bush. The fly had done its work beforehand and the trouble it had caused was carried forward to be felt next day. For the next day and the many days after contain the trouble. The bite itself is simply a tickle, and but rarely felt at the time.

Of course "whatever is, is right," and these flies are not in the Sounds for nothing. Nature intended these wondrously formed havens of beauty for solitudes, and to that end everything in them seems to point. They are wholly inaccessible by land, otherwise than by balloons. From seaward the entrances to them cannot be seen, so intricately are they placed along the line of rocky coast. Inside there is no anchorage in the deep waters and no trees sufficiently strong to hold a cable. There is no level land—save a mere strip at the head of each Sound—on which man could make a settlement. Lest he should attempt to do so, nature added the sandfly and so ensured the solitude of these West Coast Sounds for all time.

This chalky inlet swarmed in its shallowest part with crayfish. The excitement found in catching these crawlers brought many of us to more than a wet jacket. In using the spear, with which this sort of fishing was carried on, the user would sometimes so mistake his stroke as to topple over after it. Blue cod was the greatest haul made by the anglers. Mixed up in the baskets with that fish were to be found also gropers, sea perch, trumpeters, and barracouta. It was all lively and pleasant sport to practised fishermen, but to novices there were many troubles. Of such were the catching of a finger in the hooks, and occasionally sitting down upon them. For such unpractised anglers was also the bother of hooking larger fish than they could land. Having got the prize on board, there remained the further job of getting the hook out of its mouth. In the doing of that more than one fish had its revenge if it did not, as once or twice happened, get free again altogether with a sore mouth only by way of remembrance.

The great trouble to these anglers of ours were the sharks. They were not of a large size, but proved extremely lively. They had to be landed that hook and line might not be lost, otherwise, for the trouble caused, it would have been better to let them go. Their struggles drenched us in shower-bath fashion, and when thrown on the bottom of the boat, the bounds and jumps they made in their convulsions caused great confusion. To get a hook from out the mouth of a young shark is about as trying a task as can be set to an amateur angler. The fish is so slippery that no good hold of it can be got, and its wriggles would occasionally unseat its holder. The problem yet remained how to get the hook from out that terrible mouth with its many rows of sharp-pointed teeth—among which no fingers could be trusted.

Our photographers, artists, and sketchers were the busiest occupied of all those that were with us. In the Sounds or out their labours were continuous. One clever being had furnished himself with a pocket apparatus, constructed for taking photographs instantaneously, and that while way was on the vessel. The little box, for it was no more, was in its size and appearance like the case of a stereoscope. The way in which it was held when taking the picture reminded one of the captain taking his noonday observations. It looked very simple and easy to take pictures in this way—touching a spring and thereby letting the little plate fall into a cell, while the touching of another spring brought a second plate into its place. So simple did such work appear that one of our company who watched the operation remarked, in the hearing of the operator, "Why, any fool could do that!" "Yes," was the quick and crushing reply, "yes, you are right, you shall have your turn at it directly."

The sketchers in oil and water colours who were with us were surprisingly quick in finishing off their pictures. The great trouble with them seemed to be the embarrassment of riches, as the French phrase it—the variety of notable things from which to choose. "What to have a shot at," as Mr. Burton, that most enterprising of photographers expressed it, was the main thing to decide; the rest was easy. In that way their difficulties reminded me of the troubles that emigrants experienced who landed in Australia in the halcyon days of 1852. "Things are all so good that one doesn't know what to do!" was the way in which I heard indecision expressed by one who saw good opportunities both in town and country. When decision was made, however, no further troubles stood in the way of our artists. The photographic Burton would be seen lugging his heavy camera and its stand wherever a foothold could be got. All the trouble he thus took was but as a training for what was before him. We were to leave him altogether in the last Sound we should enter, where he, with one of the sketchers in oils, proposed to bide their time; trusting to fortune to get taken off by some chance or other.

Among the birds brought on board by our fowlers is a crow which shows two pink lappets under its beak, curiously like the things worn in that way by barristers when in court costume. The kakapo has become a bird for kitchen use now, and, like the fish, is welcomed by the cook when brought on board. It proves to be as good eating as barndoor fowl, and quite as easily to be captured. The pretty-looking, pocket-like gulls of these Sounds, before alluded to, are as characteristic of them as anything else in their delicate appearance and daintily marked plumage. The naturalist can but notice how the big gull called the albatross, whose home is the ocean, will abide there only, how to seas and gulfs comes the lesser-sized seagull, and how to these secluded salt-water inlets nature has adapted the smallest and prettiest of the gull tribe—a little toy thing that could not live with its bigger and storm-born kinsman the albatross, amid the winds and waves of ocean.

Mention, for remembrance, may be made of a few of the more prominent of the landmarks of this Chalky Inlet, which is of smaller size than the Sound seen the day before. Easter Passage, Sugarloaf Rock, Pinnacle Rock, Stripe Head, and Breaker Point are of such noticeable things. The Brothers are seen in two lofty peaks, and the Garden Isles are little gems of islands, well covered with orchids and ferns on all their steep sides. We land occasionally here and there to scramble about in such pretty bush as the sides of the Sound present to us. Gathering the red kata flowers and the blue and sweet-smelling veronica is excuse enough for such exploration. To get through with it was to sink nearly knee-deep in dead and decayed vegetation at every step, although from the water nothing but young and fresh-looking bush was to be seen. Getting within it was, however, as getting behind the scenes of a theatre, and finding there all the coarseness and roughness of the other side of things that had seemed so fair from the front view only. No signs of snakes or other reptiles appeared in this bush; nothing of life either but the little chicken-like weka—a bird that hopped about one's feet—and the larger kakapo, skipping about among the fallen timber as a barndoor fowl might do.

Every care was taken of us on board by the captain and his officers, as also by the like army of stewards and other assistants. To make it a holiday trip, it was necessary to help to enliven the evenings, each one of which during the trip would be passed at anchor in one or other of the sounds. Our agent in charge was equal to the occasion, and posters appear by mid-day announcing the programme of the "Tarawera Talent" for the evening. With such a passenger list as we had, there was no trouble in filling the bill, and indeed we had novelties in both performers and pieces for each night. All the talent of the Tarawera—great as it was—was not, however, furnished by the passengers. The forecastle contributed not the least part towards it. Jack is very musical, and the fiddle is not his only instrument. One of our salts could do wonders on a tin whistle; and when it came to comic singing, no salooners could compare with Jack and his mates, whose efforts in that way were honoured accordingly.

With our two days' contributions from the shore, the deck was beginning now to wear a green appearance, and so much so that one young lady, with a lisp, remarked that it looked in that way "like Christmas"—pronounced by her it sounded as "Kissmas"—so bringing to mind thoughts of the absent mistletoe. One palm that was here introduced had leaves like those of the fleur-de-lis, but possessed of the strange power of stretching out in indiarubber fashion when pulled lengthways. This palm, with these stretching leaves, grew on a stem or woody trunk of three inches diameter, and was pronounced by our botanists to be a novelty. Candle boxes, kerosene tins, and the like were now in great request for storing the vegetable wonders of our strange shores, and it was evident that plenty of work was making for the carriers' carts on our again reaching port.

The cascades found in every Sound supply us daily with fresh water of the best kind—a far preferable drink to that ship's distilled water that we should otherwise have had to use. Two lifeboats that have boxlike seating running all around them inside, for carrying flotation material beneath it, have deep spaces left in the central or unseated part of the boats. This space is used now as a well for carrying water from shore to ship. It is obtained by tapping the cascade with hose-pipe, and so conducting the water to the boat. Thence it is handed up in buckets on reaching the ship's side.

The night will be passed at anchor in this Chalky Inlet, but we shall, for the majority of us, see no more of it. In the grey of the morning the Tarawera will steam out to sea, making its way to Dusky Sound, a picturesque inlet, so christened by Captain Cook. We shall see there also a hermit's cell, the anchorite to whom it belongs being on board with us, and having there to be put on shore to his Robinson Crusoe-like solitude, "the world forgetting, by the world forgot."

NEW ENGLAND RAILWAY SYSTEM AND BYRON BAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—In the construction of our railways it is of the utmost importance to the whole people of the colony that the wisest course in all cases should be decided on. Due regard should be given to the requirements of those already settled in the districts where it is proposed to give railway communication; but it by no means follows that in this sparsely populated colony the small aggregation of inhabitants in any one or more spots should definitely fix the course or terminus of any large railway undertaking.

The natural conformation of the country makes it impossible that Sydney can, with any advantage to large areas of the colony, be the only railway terminus. There is no doubt, if it be the settled policy of the future that lines only shall be constructed branching from existing lines which have already their terminus in Sydney, more produce will be forced into Sydney than would otherwise come; but this result can only be achieved at the expense of those districts which lie within the radius that can be advantageously comprised in its traffic to Sydney. The length of line goods have to travel over must be the great factor in fixing the expense of carriage. Now, in the whole of the north-west country, except we make a terminus at some good port on its nearest seaboard, we never will be able to compete with Queensland for that traffic.

A strong agitation, which has met with considerable Parliamentary support, has been afoot for some time to recognise the necessity for this communication with the coast, and trial lines are now being surveyed, with the object, I presume, of making Grafton, on the Clarence River, the shipping port and terminus of this Northern railway; and if the Clarence River was suitable as a shipping port to compete with Moreton Bay, I think we would in this route have solved the difficulty, and by the construction of such a line tapping our great north-western country we could on equal terms compete with Queensland for a trade that is now in its merest infancy, but destined in the near future to rapid and enormous development.

But the Clarence as a shipping port is only capable of admitting vessels of comparatively small draft and tonnage, and though engineering skill may materially improve it in this respect, yet no one will maintain, I think, that it can ever be made capable of receiving large ocean-going steamers such as now trade to Port Jackson, and consequently can never become the shipping terminus of any great railway system. The Richmond and Tweed Rivers, to the north of the Clarence, are in a worse plight, and are consequently unsuited to become such a terminus.

But there is Byron Bay, formed by that most easterly projection of our continent Cape Byron—jutting well out into the ocean, and before reaching its most easterly extremity trending a little to the north, and terminating in a shallow reef running a considerable distance to the north, and embracing a magnificent bay of deep water, sheltered now from all the worst winds on the coast. It could be made as safe a harbour as there is in the world, by filling out on the line of the existing reef, till eventually Juan Island, about one mile and a-half out from the main land, was reached. This would make a thoroughly land-locked bay, capable of receiving the largest vessel afloat, and situate so close to the Queensland boundary, would, if made the terminus of our Northern railway, enable us to bring the produce of our own colony by the shortest route to a splendid shipping port, being certain of retaining our own trade, much of which is already beginning to find its way to Brisbane, but would also compete with the Queensland line for its now border traffic.

If, therefore, broad statesman-like views are to operate with the present rulers of the country, they should make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the project I now briefly point out in this letter, that they may be guided aright in this great national undertaking they have had so long under consideration, and which the vigorous pressure of faithful supporters is likely to lead them into the adoption of a terminus for the railway system we have been discussing that never can be effectual for its purpose, for the one simple reason that the Clarence River can never be made a shipping port for deep ocean-going vessels. I am satisfied if the people of the colony could only make themselves partially acquainted with this project no doubt whatever would remain as to the result.

I can well understand the efforts that have been made, and are making, to influence the Government in this railway project; but are those efforts directed for the general good?

The quantity and capabilities of the land north of the Clarence River have no equal in this or any other of the Australian colonies. It is now some two years since I pointed out, through the columns of your paper, the value of this land for agricultural purposes, the growth and cultivation of sugar. The result is that within that short period this country has been inundated by the very best class of yeomanry the colony can boast of, with sinews and means at their disposal to develope its resources, and only requires the construction of such a railway to accomplish the greatest and, prospectively, most profitable national work that has been attempted in the history of this colony. I am, &c.,

LAW REPORT.

SUPREME COURT.—Friday, August 3.

Banco Court.—(Before their Honors the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Faucett, and Sir George Innes.)

ANDERSON V. FAIRFAX.

Mr. Darley, Q.C., Mr. Pilcher, and Mr. Bruce Smith (instructed by Messrs. Creagh and Williams), for appellants; and Mr. Owen, Q.C., Mr. C. J. Manning, and Mr. Mann (instructed by Messrs. Heron and Smith), for respondent.

In this appeal their Honors to-day delivered the following judgment:—

The Chief Justice: In this case plaintiff and his wife some three years ago established what they called an "Artisans' and Agricultural College" at Balmain. It appears that this institution, formed by them as a college, was intended for the education in handicrafts of some sort of destitute boys, and in order to enable them to support it and instruct and maintain these destitute boys, they solicited subscriptions from the public. For some time they carried on the business of this college at Balmain, and afterwards removed to a place at Lane Cove, where they remained some time, and from that went to some Crown land at Middle Harbour with the permission of the Government. During this time they were soliciting subscriptions from the public, and in that way the institution assumed a quasi public character. They either obtained permission from the Government to use this land, or something was said which led them to believe that they had permission. It is immaterial whether that was so or not. There they were on the understanding, as far as they were concerned, that they had that permission. Subscriptions were still solicited by them to aid them in what appeared to be a benevolent undertaking. The wife of the plaintiff was the person who went about the country, and who, it is said, even visited some of the neighbouring colonies; and a large amount of money (about £900) was collected by her during the time operations were carried on. No large number of boys appear to have been at this place, and the only number I can gather as being there was six or seven, and they were engaged, it appears, in making furniture and upholstery. There was a workshop, and the persons engaged in doing this work were apparently capable of teaching the boys. These boys were of tender age, ranging from 6 up to 8, and one may have been older. At all events, they were young lads. While these operations were going on, and plaintiff and his wife resided and carried on this college on this land, they made application through the defendants to send a reporter there for the purpose of seeing how this establishment was being conducted, in order, no doubt, if the newspaper people approved of it, that they would take some notice of the college, and speak of it in such a way with regard to its utility as would enable plaintiffs to get greater support from the public than they had hitherto received. Some three or four interviews were had with one of the editors of the Herald—the paper belonging to defendants—and two attempts were made by a reporter from the establishment to get there, but the place was in an out of the way locality and not easy of access, and the reporter on these two occasions did not get as far as plaintiff's place. Ultimately defendants, being importuned by plaintiffs, sent another reporter, Mr. Lyne, to North Shore, where he obtained a vehicle to carry him to the locality in question. He was accompanied by Mr. Maxted, the boarding-out officer, who, it appears, under a recent Act, is empowered to superintend the boarding-out of children supported in some of the public institutions or the Orphan Schools, Parliament having thought it expedient that steps should be taken to board out with members of the public some of the children so supported; and the officer in question was appointed to superintend this operation. Mr. Lyne, accompanied by Mr. Maxted, went over to North Shore, and to the plaintiffs' place. It so happened that when they arrived there plaintiffs were away, and there was no one there except some person engaged by the plaintiff, and who was in charge. The boys were not there, and they were told that they were down somewhere near the water. They went down a declivity to where there was a spring, and found the boys. They got into conversation with them, and a great number of questions were put by Mr. Maxted, and Mr. Lyne being, as we all know, a very experienced shorthand writer, took down the answers, and a full report of what was said by the boys was taken. The inquiries, it appears, were made not only of the boys who were there, but of another boy who had been but was no longer there, and some of the strongest statements against plaintiff were made by that boy. That is to say, these statements were made not at the place to which Mrs. Anderson or her husband invited defendants to send a reporter for the purpose of making inquiry, but at another place altogether, and from a person who had been at the college, but who was not there then. The result of these inquiries was published in the Sydney Morning Herald, and in consequence of that publication the Government it appears thought it expedient to send a medical gentleman occasionally employed by one of the Government departments, Dr. Egan, to examine these boys, and an inspector of police was sent there also. Well, these two authorities, having been sent by the Government in consequence of the publication of this report in the Herald, examined the boys, and the result was that the boys were taken away from this establishment. They were found, with the exception of one, suffering from itch, and had been subject to no treatment. They were taken away and removed to the Benevolent Asylum, where four or five remained in bed for five or six weeks until they were cured of this disease. One of the boys was a cripple, and there is a statement made that these children—because I cannot call them anything else—had to go to a Public school from 2½ to 3 miles away over a very rough road; and this little cripple had to go to this school, and not being able to walk, some of the other children had to carry him. The reporter found that, judging from the appearance of the children, they were not well nourished, and statements were made about the labour imposed upon them of drawing water up the hill, and that they were severely punished if they did not do it promptly. And many other things were stated, all of which were calculated to impress the public with the idea that very great oppression existed, and that the institution was one which was not only not deserving of public support, but called for the intervention of the Government to shut it up, and take these children away. I am not now dealing with the merits of the case, but I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that in the publication of this report, and the steps which defendants took for the purpose of making these inquiries, they not only discharged a public duty, but rendered a great public service. I say that altogether apart from the merits of this motion. I believe defendants have earned the gratitude of the public by the steps they took in investigating the working of this institution. Further with reference to the gentleman sent there, whom I know, and with whom I have had intercourse in the way of taking notes at commissions, I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that it would be difficult to find a more competent and trustworthy person than Mr. Lyne. Not only did the defendants discharge a public duty by making these inquiries, but they sent as competent and reliable a person as could be selected from their own or any other staff to discharge that duty. Having made these remarks about this college and the steps which defendants took, I now come to the question we have to dispose of, and that is whether the Judge took a wrong view in holding that there was no case of privilege in reference to this publication. There seems to be, judging from the course of the argument of the learned counsel for defendants, a widespread desire on the part of newspaper proprietors to have the law so interpreted or so altered as to give them power to publish anything they like of any public man so long as they believe it to be true, and to be held free from any liability on its untruth being made manifest, so long as what they say is said bona fide. And I am aware that a Judge who occupies one of the highest positions in the empire—Chief Justice Cockburn—did on more than one occasion give expression to views which would support that contention. I have on more than one occasion referred to these opinions, and I have invariably expressed it as my opinion that they were unsound and not to be relied upon. The Courts have always set their faces against the notion that a newspaper proprietor, when his conduct is called in question in the publication of a libel, may fall back upon the plea that what he said was said by somebody else, and that he believed it was true. Efforts have at times been made to induce the Courts to hold that to be the law, but the Courts have refused. One of the earliest cases, very many years ago—as far back as 1829, more than half a century ago—is that of M'Pherson and Daniels, reported in 10th volume of Barnewall and Creswell, page 263. This was "an action for slander, for words spoken of the plaintiff in his trade, importing a direct assertion made by defendant that the plaintiff was insolvent. The defendant pleaded that one T. W. spoke and published to the defendant the same words, and that the defendant at the time of speaking and publishing them declared that he had heard and been told the same from and by the said T. W." That was the plea. It was held "upon demurrer that this plea was bad, first because it did not confess and avoid the charge mentioned in the declaration, the words in the declaration importing an unqualified assertion made by the defendant in the words stated in the declaration, and the words used in the plea importing that the defendant mentioned the fact on the authority of T. W. Secondly, because it did not give the plaintiff any cause of action against T. W., inasmuch as it did not allege that T. W. spoke the words falsely and maliciously. Thirdly, because it is not an answer"—this is the material point as far as this particular inquiry is concerned—"thirdly, because it is not an answer to an action for oral slander for a defendant to show that he heard it from another, and named the person at the time, without showing that the defendant believed it to be true, and that he spoke the words on a justifiable occasion." Now, Mr. Justice Littledale, one of the most eminent of the Judges that ever sat at Westminster Hall, and sitting on this occasion with Judges of equal eminence—there were Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Justice Littledale, and Mr. Justice Parke (afterwards Baron Parke)—Mr. Justice Littledale says on page 272:—"To constitute a good defence, therefore, to such an action, where the publication of the slander is not intended to be denied, the defendant must negative the charge of malice (which in its legal sense denotes a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse), or show that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages. It is competent to a defendant, upon the general issue, to show that the words were not spoken maliciously; by proving that they were spoken on an occasion, or under circumstances, which the law, on grounds of public policy, allows, as in the course of a parliamentary or judicial proceeding, or in giving the character of a servant. But if the defendant relies upon the truth as an answer to the action, he must plead that matter specially; because the truth is an answer to the action, not because it negatives the charge of malice (for a person may wrongfully or maliciously utter slanderous matter though true, and thereby subject himself to an indictment), but because it shows that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages." I may state here that we all know our law is different from that, and that the defendant must show it is for the public benefit. "For the law will not permit a man to recover damages in respect of an injury to a character which he either does not, or ought not, to possess. Now, a defendant, by shewing that he stated at the time when he published slanderous matter of a plaintiff, that he heard it from a third person, does not negative the charge of malice, for a man may wrongfully and maliciously repeat that which another person may have uttered upon a justifiable occasion. Such a plea does not show that the slander was published on an occasion, or under circumstances, which the law, on grounds of public policy, allows. Nor does it show that the plaintiff has not sustained, or is not entitled in a court of law to recover, damages. As great an injury may accrue from the wrongful repetition as from the first publication of slander; the first utterer may have been a person insane, or of bad character. The person who repeats it gives greater weight to the slander. A party is not the less entitled to recover damages in a court of law for injurious matter published concerning him, because another person previously published it. That shows not that the plaintiff has been guilty of any misconduct which renders it unfit that he should recover damages in a court of law, but that he has been wronged by another person as well as the defendant; and may, consequently, if the slander was not published by the first utterer on a lawful occasion, have an action for damages against that person as well as the defendant. It seems to me, therefore, that such a plea is not an answer to an action for slander, because it does not negative the charge of malice, nor does it show that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages." That clear and rational exposition of the law has been regarded as a correct exposition of it ever since. The language of Mr. Justice Littledale has been repeatedly referred to as expressing in the clearest and most accurate manner the law upon that point. Much the same kind of thing came into controversy many years after that. In a celebrated case in 1863, thirty-three or thirty-four years afterwards, there was the case of Campbell v. Spottiswoode, in volume III. of Best and Smith's Reports, page 769. This is what was decided there:—"1. When a writer in a newspaper or elsewhere, in commenting on public matters, makes imputations on the character of the individuals concerned in them, which are false and libellous, as being beyond the limits of fair comment, it is no defence that he bona fide believed in the truth of these imputations. 2. The plaintiff published in a newspaper, of which he was the editor and part proprietor, a proposal for inserting in it a series of letters on the duty of evangelizing the Chinese, and for promoting the circulation of the numbers of the paper in which those letters should appear in order to call attention to the importance of this work of evangelization. A series of letters accordingly appeared in the newspaper, and in the same numbers lists of subscribers for copies of the paper for distribution. In an action of libel against the defendant, the publisher of another newspaper, for an article commenting on the plaintiff's scheme, imputing that his real object was to promote the sale of his paper, and suggesting that the names of some of the subscribers in the list were fictitious, the jury found for the plaintiff, with the addition that the writer of the article believed the imputations in it to be well founded: Held, that this belief of the defendant was no answer to the action." Now, that case came on for argument before Chief Justice Cockburn, Mr. Justice Crompton, Mr. Justice Blackburn, and Mr. Justice Mellor; and all these Judges agreed in the principle decided on that occasion. Chief Justice Cockburn says, among other things, on page 776:—"It is said on behalf of the defendant that as the plaintiff addressed himself to the public in a matter not only of public but universal interest, his conduct in that matter was open to public criticism, and I entirely concur in that proposition. If the proposed scheme were defective, or utterly disproportionate to the result aimed at, it might be assailed with hostile criticism. But then a line must be drawn between criticism upon public conduct and the imputation of motives by which that conduct may be supposed to be actuated; one man has no right to impute to another, whose conduct may be fairly open to ridicule or disapprobation, base, sordid, and wicked motives, unless there is so much ground for the imputation that a jury shall find, not only that he had an honest belief in the truth of his statements, but that his belief was not without foundation. In the present case, the charges made against the plaintiff were unquestionably without foundation. It may be that, in addition to the motive of religious zeal, the plaintiff was not wholly insensible to to the collateral object of promoting the circulation of his newspaper, but there was no evidence that he had resorted to false devices to induce persons to contribute to his scheme. That being so, Mr. Bovill is obliged to say that because the writer of the article had a bona fide belief that the statements he made were true, he was privileged. I cannot assent to that doctrine. It was competent to the writer to have attacked the plaintiff's scheme, and, perhaps, he might have suggested that the effect of the subscriptions which the plaintiff was asking the public to contribute would be only to put money into his pocket. But to say that he was actuated only by the desire of putting money into his pocket, and that he resorted to fraudulent expedients for that purpose, is charging him with dishonesty; and that is going farther than the law allows." Mr. Justice Crompton, on page 778, says this:—"I am of the same opinion, for the reasons given by the Lord Chief Justice. It must be taken that the jury have found that the imputations were made not within the range of fair argument or criticism on the plaintiff's publication of his scheme. Nothing is more important than that fair and full latitude of discussion should be allowed to writers on any public matter, whether it be the conduct of public men, or the proceedings in courts of justice or in Parliament, or the publication of a scheme or of a literary work. But it is always to be left to a jury to say whether the publication has gone beyond the limits of a fair comment on the subject matter discussed. A writer is not entitled to overstep those limits and impute base and sordid motives which are not warranted by the facts, and I cannot for a moment think that, because he has a bona fide belief that he is publishing what is true, that is any answer to an action for libel. With respect to the publication of the plaintiff's scheme, the defendant might ridicule it and point out the improbability of its success; but that was all he had a right to do. The first question is, whether the article on which this action is brought is a libel or no libel—not whether it is privileged or not. It is no libel if it is within the range of fair comment, that is, if a person might fairly and bona fide write the article; otherwise it is. It is said that there is a privilege, not to writers in newspapers only, but to the public in general, to comment on the public acts of public men, provided the writer believes that what he writes is true; in other words, that this belongs to the class of privileged communications, in which the malice of the writer becomes a question for the jury; that is, where, from the particular circumstances or position in which a person is placed, there is a legal or social duty in the nature of a private or peculiar right, as opposed to the rights possessed by the community at large, to assert what he believes. In those cases of privilege their is an exemption from legal liability in the absence of malice; and it is necessary to prove actual malice. But there is no such privilege here. It is the right of all the Queen's subjects to discuss public matters; but no person can have a right on that ground to publish what is defamatory merely because he believes it to be true. If this were so a public man might have base motives imputed to him without having an opportunity of righting himself. Therefore it is necessary to confine privilege, as the law has always confined it, to cases of real necessity or duty, as that of a master giving a servant a character, or of a person who has been robbed charging another with robbing him. Though the word 'privilege' is used loosely in some of the cases as applied to the right which every person has to comment on public matters, I think that in all the cases cited the real question was whether the alleged libel was a fair comment such as every person might make upon a public matter, and if not there was no privilege." I have cited that at that length for the purpose of emphatically making it appear that this notion of privilege as applied to the publication of newspapers is entirely an erroneous one. Well, a judge of great eminence, Mr. Justice Blackburn, on page 780 expresses himself to the same effect: "It is important to bear in mind that the question is, not whether the publication is privileged, but whether it is a libel. The word 'privilege' is often used loosely, and in a popular sense, when applied to matters which are not, properly speaking, privileged. But, for the present purpose, the meaning of the word is that a person stands in such a relation to the facts of the case that he is justified in saying or writing what would be slanderous or libellous in any one else. For instance, a master giving a character of a servant stands in a privileged relation; and the cases of a memorial to the Lord Chancellor or Home Secretary on the conduct of a justice of the peace, Harrison v. Bush (a), and of a statement to a public functionary, reflecting upon some public officer, Beatson v. Skene (b), rank themselves under that class. In Maitland v. Bramwell (c), the bona fides of the defendant was left to the jury, because she was privileged by her position to say what she believed to be true; so in Eastwood v. Holmes (c), when properly understood, Willes, J., must have considered that there was a privilege of this kind when he nonsuited the plaintiff in an action against the publisher of a report of the proceedings of the British Archaeological Association, in which it was stated that some supposed antiquities offered for sale by the plaintiff were of recent fabrication. In these cases no action lies unless there is proof of express malice. If it could be shown that the editor or publisher of a newspaper stands in a privileged position, it would be necessary to prove actual malice. But no authority has been cited for that proposition; and I take it to be certain that he has only the general right which belongs to the public to comment upon public matters—for example, the acts of a Minister of State; or, according to modern authorities, somewhat extending the doctrine, where a person has done or published anything which may fairly be said to invite comment, as in the case of a handbill or advertisement, Paris v. Levy (a). In such cases everyone has a right to make fair and proper comment; and so long as it is within that limit, it is no libel." Not, be it observed, that it is not privilege, but it is no libel. Then Mr. Justice Mellor, on page 782, to the same effect, says: "If comment is beyond the limits of fair criticism it becomes a libel. And I agree that the question in this case is libel or no libel. If the words were used upon a justifiable occasion, no action could be maintained; for the interest and exigencies of society require that there should be free communication between parties who have a duty, either moral or legal, to discharge towards each other, as in the common case of a master giving the character of a servant, in which defamatory words are privileged, unless proved to be false and malicious. But in the present case there was no legal or moral duty on the writer to make these imputations upon the plaintiff. The jury found that the comments were beyond the limits of fair criticism. I think they were; and it would be very hard if an action could not be maintained." Well, that was in 1863. The same principle was involved in a case in 1868, the case of Watkin v. Hall, in Law Reports III., Queen's Bench, page 396. In that case the declaration of the plaintiff was—"That the defendant had spoken of the plaintiff, who was chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company, and concerning a fall in the shares of the company, the words following:—'You have heard what has caused the fall—I mean the rumour about the South-Eastern chairman having failed?'—meaning thereby that the defendant, being chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company, had become embarrassed in his pecuniary affairs, and had become and was insolvent. Plea, that the defendant meant, and was understood by the bystanders to mean, that there had been and there was a rumour current on the Stock Exchange about the chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company having failed, and not that the plaintiff had become embarrassed, and had become insolvent, as in the innuendo alleged; and that it was true that there had been and then was a rumour current on the Stock Exchange that the chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company had failed. Held, that the plea was no answer to the declaration, for that the existence of the rumour did not justify the repetition of the slander contained in it, without showing that the defendant believed it to be true, and that he spoke the words on a justifiable occasion." Mr. Justice Blackburn delivered a judgment in that case also, and he says:—"There is no pretence on the record, as it stands now—whatever the evidence may turn out to be—that the slander was uttered under circumstances which justify the repetition of the rumour, upon the ground of the repetition being a privileged communication. Then, does the allegation that the slander was a rumour, which the defendant in fact heard, afford a defence? I do not think better words can be used to express the principle applicable to this point than those of Littledale, J." Then he quoted the passage I have already quoted from Barnwell and Cresswell. Mr. Justice Lush delivers himself to the same effect. Now, as to whether a newspaper proprietor is in a different position to a private individual, I will refer to the case of Davison v. Duncan, Queen's Bench Reports, E and B, page 231. Mr. Justice Coleridge, who sat upon the bench with Lord Chief Justice Campbell, Judge Wightman, and Judge Crompton, said in that case: "There is no difference in law whether the publication is by the proprietor of a newspaper, or by some one else. There is no legal duty on either to publish what is injurious to another; and if any person does do so he must defend himself on some legal ground." I have cited all these cases, not because I think it necessary to enforce my opinion of the law by reference to them, but because of what I consider to be a widespread popular delusion as to the rights of newspapers to publish with impunity, if they think it bona fide, exactly what they believe to be true. They have no such right. They have the same right as any other individual member of the community to comment on matters of public concern. They may criticise the conduct of public functionaries from the highest down to the lowest, and they may expose corruption, of course, on the assumption that they are able to prove what they expose. They may comment on the ability shown either by a Minister or a Judge, or by any other public functionary. They may question his skill and knowledge. They may question in the case of public functionaries their policy, and do it in a very rough and extended manner. The exigencies of society require that in all free communities there should be this large power of investigation. We are not subject to arbitrary government, as in Russia and some other places. The persons who rule us are placed there by our own act, and they exercise the power entrusted to them according to their own judgment and ability. In the case of Judges they did not legislate, but laid down the law as altered and directed by the Legislature from time to time, or the law as it has been known from time immemorial. And, in order that persons entrusted with this large authority shall be kept within bounds, everyone has a free and perfect right to comment on all that he sees. It is there that the freedom of the press is valuable, but there is a limit beyond which it is necessary, for the sake of the public service, that this power of comment and examination should not be allowed to go. There are various kinds of tyrannies, but there is no tyranny which would be more disastrous and intolerable than the freedom of an unbridled press, over which there was no control. I can imagine the heartburning and disastrous effects that might be inflicted upon families or communities, if the press had this unbridled, unlimited power. They have not that power, and it is not necessary for the protection of the public that they should have it, and it would be in the last degree dangerous that they should have it. In saying this, I may express my regret that one of the counsel for the defendants—the Attorney-General of the colony—has expressed on behalf of the Government some intention to submit a bill to Parliament, I presume for the purpose of giving something like these powers. I may misunderstand what has been said, but if my assumption is correct, I hope the Legislature will have sufficient common sense to set their faces against any such proposition as that. The proprietors of the press have only the same power as any other individual. The privilege they have is not greater than the privilege of any other individual. Where a person makes a statement as a matter of duty, and makes it to a person who has a corresponding duty to perform, he is privileged, and if there were not privileges of that kind abuses could not be investigated. Persons might have thieves introduced into their houses unless statements made for the protection of individuals were privileged. Suppose the case of a magistrate who had done something most corrupt, and it came to the knowledge of an individual, who communicated it to the Minister. If in communicating it he makes a mistake, still, if the mistake is made bona-fide, it is privileged. The mere mistake in a case of that kind does not involve the person making the misstatement in liability, unless it can be shown that he makes it wilfully. A newspaper is not a public institution like a court. The laws of the country are laid down by this Court, subject to appeal to the Privy Council, but the kind of thing I have already referred to is not the law. We have not come to that, and I do not think we shall. Newspapers have no special privileges to make comments on any individual because they believe them to be true; and it follows from that that the publication in this instance is not protected if it should turn out to be untrue. If any statement was made by defendants in commenting on this institution, in respect to which I repeat they have done signal service, if they made statements of a defamatory character, then whether they make them of their own intervention, or because someone told them, they were not protected, and it is that which the Judge told the jury, and as I consider told them correctly. He would have made a mistake had he told them that there was any privilege. It is said that there is a difference in this case because defendants were invited to go over this establishment and report upon it. I do not see that that makes the slightest difference. They were invited to go over there, but they were not invited to express their opinions in a defamatory way. The right which they had to make statements which were not protected by privilege was not taken away from the press. They were not deprived of that right. That was their right when Mrs. Anderson was asking for a reporter, and she did not deprive her husband of the right which he had to be protected against anyone publishing defamatory statements against him unless they were undoubtedly true. If they made statements against him which were unfounded, they must take the consequences. And those consequences were left to the jury, who took a certain view. Whether I would have taken that view had I been on the jury is another thing. Perhaps I would not have given such large damages, or more than a farthing. It is not my practice to make harsh comments unnecessarily upon the conduct of a jury; for, however erroneously they may determine matters sometimes, it has never been my practice as a Judge to find fault with them. And I do not now say anything about the conclusion arrived at by the jury who tried this case, but it may be that if I had been one of them I would not have concurred in a verdict of that sort. There are occasions where, although the law may be in favour of the plaintiff, juries may determine not to give the plaintiff the full benefit of the law; and although sitting as Judges we may not consider that a proper course to take, we may as men of the world think that the course taken by the jury was not a judicious course, and in this case a smaller verdict may have given more satisfaction to public opinion. What we have to deal with is the law, and I am of opinion that his Honor in the way he laid down the law to the jury did not go beyond the limits of the law as laid down by the authorities I have cited. There is only one other point, and that is the rejection of these reports. Apart from the libel complained of, is a statement that what the defendants said was not so strong as these reports would have justified, and then there is an innuendo that they made their statements weaker than they might have done having reference to these reports. It is said that there ought to have been a statement in the declaration that the defendants had proved the statements to be true. I do not at all take that view. I take it as no more than saying, "We make these statements, and other persons have made statements still stronger." Whether it is so or not does not affect their liability. The inspector may have made stronger statements, or Mr. Maxted; but it does not bear at all upon the liability of these defendants, and to have allowed it would have had an improper effect, as it would have enabled the defendants to put before the jury statements of the boys which were not made in a proper way. That is a thing which is required by law, and whether these officers made stronger statements is altogether immaterial. On the opinions I have expressed I think that this rule ought to be refused, and I take that course because I am so clear about it that it should not be left in doubt from this time until the rule was argued, presuming that a rule had been granted.

Mr. Justice Faucett: No doubt this is a question of considerable importance, and one thing is quite certain, and that is that as to the main point to be settled we have no specific instances bearing upon it. We have no decision touching the particular facts that arise in this case, and we must fall back, as we are frequently obliged to do, on those principles of law that govern other cases coming before us. I do not intend to follow his Honor the Chief Justice in reference to the right that a newspaper proprietor has to comment upon public acts, because I think it is utterly impossible to dissent from him as to the views he expressed upon that point, and as to the authorities he has cited. I have looked through most of those authorities since yesterday afternoon, and I am clearly of opinion that he has correctly referred to them, and it is utterly impossible to deny the conclusions he has drawn from the clear authorities that have been brought before the Court by him in so forcible a manner. But there is still another case behind, and in considering this matter I am obliged to fall back upon the technical considerations affecting this particular case. It appears to me that one distinction has been overlooked, or, at all events, not received with that weight with which it ought to have been received. There are two pleas upon the record here. There is one plea of "not guilty," and another plea of justification under our statute. Now, as I threw out yesterday, it has always appeared to me that the latter plea places the defendants in a very great difficulty, because it asserts positively that the statements made are true, and further that they were for the public benefit. In many cases there would be no difficulty about saying that the statement, if true, was for the public benefit; but there is in many cases the greatest possible difficulty in proving that these statements are true. I find that the view I expressed yesterday is expressed in nearly the very same terms, in a text book to which I venture to refer—"The Law of Libel and Slander," by Odgers. On page 485 it is said as to justification:—"This is a most dangerous plea, and should never be placed on the record without careful consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence by which it is to be supported. For the strictest proof is required (see Leyman v. Latimer, 3 Ex. D. 15, 352; 47 L. J. Ex. 470; 25 W. R. 751; 26 W. R. 305; 37 L. T. 360, 819); and, if not proved, the defendant's persistence in the charge is some evidence of malice, and will always tend to aggravate the damages given against him. The defence cannot be raised without a special plea; but counsel should never draw such a plea without express instructions, and even then should always caution the defendant as to the risk he runs." I must say that that in my experience I have found that was the case; and I have found that, though pleas of justification are constantly pleaded in actions of libel, they are in nine cases out of ten not proved; but they are constantly pleaded, not with the expectation that they will be proved fully, but for the purpose, as it is supposed, of admitting evidence that may go in reduction of the damages. In this case, although I have not read the evidence—which, I perceive, is very voluminous indeed—yet, from the statements which have been made, I think I may fairly assume that plea of justification was not proved. There were some statements unquestionably defamatory about which, it appears, no evidence was given, and consequently that plea failed; and, no doubt, when a plea of justification fails, the jury is almost always strongly impressed by the circumstance that such statements are made, that there is an attempt to prove them, and that the proof fails. Well, as that plea has failed I do not think it is necessary to refer to it further. But the other plea is one of great importance, and in reference to it two considerations arise. First, as to the duties, if they can be called duties, which a newspaper proprietor undertakes to discharge towards the public; and secondly, what arises in this case, as it appears to me, apart from those duties altogether. As to the first, I have already said that his Honor has gone into it fully. He has shown, as it appears to me, that a newspaper proprietor may comment fully upon any public matter. It is not, as I said yesterday, a privilege in the proper sense of the word. The word is misused; but in looking through the cases it seems that the word is continually used by the Judges—even by the most eminent—whether properly or improperly it is, in my opinion, unnecessary now to consider. But what is specially called a privilege is another question altogether, and for my part, although the words are used, and although I am desirous of drawing the distinction as far as possible, I think it unnecessary to draw that distinction too fine in actions of this kind. Now I am quite aware that the question of privilege seems to be more or less limited to a particular class of cases. Where there is a duty arising between one person and another, or where there is a duty arising from a particular person to make a communication to an officer of the public—these are instances in which the question of privilege arises. But it appears that in those cases we have merely instances or examples, and the question is not whether we should enlarge the principle, but whether we should apply the principle—extend the principle—to other cases that come within all the characteristics of those cases that have been cited as special instances and cases of privilege. It is a common thing to say—to give us an instance of privilege—the right that a person has, that a master or employer has, who is consulted about the conduct of a servant. A protection arises there for the public benefit. Another instance is given, as I have said, where a person finds it necessary to communicate with an officer of the Government in reference to the conduct of an inferior, or, it may be, a superior officer of the Government. That is given as another instance of privilege, and some cases have been cited where a public meeting took place in which the parties concerned were interested, and where two parties interested made statements to other parties also interested. These are instances. The case of Lawton v. Bishop of Sodar and Man is another instance of privilege. These are all different instances, but the question is, are we to confine the principle simply to cases exactly the same as those that have arisen before? Now, appears to me the modern course of the application of law is this—that as the state of things progresses, as necessities arise, we do not introduce a new principle, but we apply the old principle if we find that the facts arising come within the principle. The question here is now whether this case is brought within the principle of a privileged communication. It most certainly does not correspond precisely with any of those cases or class of cases I have referred to; but it is one of its own kind—almost, I may say, sui generis—and we have now to determine whether it comes within that principle which has been called a privilege, or whether it is such a communication as a privileged communication. Well, now, this, if at all a protection to the defendants in this instance, must be altogether apart from their position as the proprietors of a newspaper. There must be something new arising—some new fact existing in the case, the existence of which puts them in a new position, a position different from that in which they had been as the proprietors, solely, of a newspaper. Now, what are the facts? As the proprietors of a newspaper they have great influence—undoubtedly great influence; and I do not desire to say one word against the utility of the public press, as it is called. We all admit the great importance that the press has attained in modern times, when we find that men of great ability, of great intellect and experience, in many instances men of very powerful intellects and wonderful attainments, devote their lives to this particular occupation. As men of such capacity, such intellect, such large and commanding experience, their opinions, if for no other reason, are entitled to weighty consideration. But the question is this. We find here that the plaintiff in this case and his wife feel in their particular position the great importance and benefit it would be to them to have some statement in this particular newspaper with reference to their institution. That is the first thing. It is not the newspaper proprietor sending a reporter there in the first instance, as he would do to any public institution. That, no doubt, arises in the matter; but in addition to that and beyond that, these people, the proprietors and managers of this institution, over and over again request the proprietors of the newspaper—that is the defendants—to send a person there to examine the institution and to report upon it. The instructions were not limited. They did not say, "Go there and look at the place and state what you see." They did not say that, and they did not add to it, "Do not report anything more than what you see." They did not say, "Go and inquire there and report what you hear." They did not say, "Do not introduce anything that is unfavourable to this institution." They did not say that, for if they did I have no doubt whatever that the proprietors of this newspaper would have said, "We shall not go under those circumstances; but if we go we must act upon our own responsibility, and we must do what you require of us. We will examine and report if you wish us." The desire and the request of these people being that the proprietors of the newspaper should visit their institution and report upon it—this request being, as it appears to me, without any restriction whatever, unlimited—can anyone doubt that if the reporter went there and made inquiries and found the result of those inquiries highly favourable to the institution, can anyone doubt that the proprietors of the institution would have been highly pleased, and that it would have been a great advantage to them? And that is what was wanted. It turns out, however, that in the honest discharge of their duty, the honest performance of the request that had been made to them, they state things which were not true—cannot be proved to be true—and the question is not whether those things are true, not whether those things are justified—that is the mistake which I think is made—not whether those things are justified, but whether the occasion on which the report is made was a privileged occasion within the principle to which I have alluded. Well, what is the first thing they do? As I said yesterday, they went to the place. Were they privileged to go there, to go at all? They went at the request of these people. They were licensed to go there. What did they go for? They went to examine the place. Were they privileged to do that? It is the very thing they were requested to do. They examined. Was the examination to be limited? There was no such restriction placed upon them; and I confess that I cannot understand that because they were not told distinctly to make inquiries, therefore they were not authorised by being invited to go there to make inquiries. I think it was a necessary part of the instruction they received—in the invitation they received to go there, in the first instance, to see about the place, to look about it, to examine into it and in doing so to make such inquiries as they found necessary to enable them to ascertain the state of the institution. It strikes me, and I confess it struck me from the commencement, that the invitation to go there comprised all those things—the right to go, the right to examine, the right to inquire. What would be the use of going there at all if they were not to examine? What would be the use of examining if they were not entitled to inquire? They may go there and see some particular article of furniture, for instance, and they ask, "What is this for?" They are told, "This is a writing desk," "Well," they say "this is a bad kind of writing desk," and it turns out that it is not a writing desk at all, that it is intended for something else. Why should they not tell what they found out by inquiries if they made the inquiries honestly? Well, it is really not a difficulty in regard to what the law is, but simply a difficulty about the application of the law. Now, the question still is, are we to confine the expression of privileged communication, or privileged occasion, to such instances as I have already referred to? Sometimes the meaning of an expression is ascertained by considering what the converse would be, and it is a singular thing that in examining these cases we find that some of the ablest Judges use the converse of a privileged occasion as a distinction itself of the words. In the first instance, when once a privileged communication is established, or rather, as I should more properly say, when it is established that the occasion on which a statement is made is privileged, the consequence of that is that the idea of malice is refuted. That is the immediate consequence of it. It is a consequence following from the occasion when the occasion is once established. But we find it used, for instance, by several authorities, as I find it is stated here, speaking of a privileged occasion—"If the occasion is such as repels the presumption of malice the communication is privileged." That is really the converse. Establish the case as privileged and the consequence follows. Here is the consequence stated—given as a distinction of the thing itself—and we find that running through a number of cases. Now let us examine this. How is this occasion on which they are authorised to report privileged? That is really the question. Were they authorised to report at all? If they were, it appears to me the occasion was privileged. There can be no doubt they were authorised to report, and requested to report, and the privilege to report follows. Being authorised to report, it appears to me to follow necessarily that the occasion was such as repels prima facie the presumption of malice in making the report. In other words, that the occasion was privileged. I cannot see my way out of that position or my way short of that. It may not come within the case to which I refer, but I say it comes within the principle upon which these cases have been decided, and we are now only applying the principle to the new state of facts, and not altering the law, in the view I take. Then comes another question. Some statements have been made here that were ascertained from the boys of the place, as I am told, and that these statements were not proved to be true. Well, from what I have said, if the occasion is privileged, as I believe it is, it is necessary to prove malice, and malice may be proved or inferred from the statements being proved to be untrue. If they were proved to be so grossly untrue as to show that they were careless and thoughtless innuendoes, honestly made, then, if the occasion is privileged, it is necessary to prove that they were untrue, in order to rebut the assumption of fair and honest dealing. So far it might be that the statements would show that the communications were not honest ones, but that would be a question for the jury. They should have been told that the occasion was privileged, and then they should have been told that it was a question for them to consider whether these facts were of such a kind as would rebut the inference to be drawn as to there being malice. That was not done, and the matter was left by his Honor on the general principle affecting newspaper proprietors. There is another part of this case that may possibly prevent this verdict from being disturbed if we went more fully into the case, and that is this: It appears there were statements introduced into this first article that were obtained from persons outside the institution altogether, from boys that had been there and were there no longer, and who were found not at the institution but elsewhere. Well, it appears to me that these statements made by boys and going into the article did not come within the principle I have been laying down; that there was no invitation by Mrs. Anderson to examine boys outside the institution. It simply meant an invitation to go to the institution, to see how it was going on, and make inquiries there, and I do not think it went beyond that. And so far as these statements were made as coming from persons outside the institution and not connected with it, I think it does not travel within the protection I have referred to, and would not justify the setting aside of the verdict. I merely express an opinion upon the question of law raised in this case, and I agree in the view taken by his Honor on this point, that there would be no use granting a new trial, because the result would simply be that the damages might be reduced. I do not think it necessary to say anything more upon that point. There is another smaller point of far less consequence, and that is whether these reports were properly rejected. To a certain extent I do not think it is really of much consequence and would not have been sufficient to grant a new trial if there had been nothing else in the case. At the same time I am disposed to think that they were improperly rejected, because there is a statement in the article that the reports were stronger than the article. That statement in the article is selected as part of the libel charged, and the defendants justify that on the plea of justification. How can they justify it in any other way than by the production of the reports? I do not see how they can. The evidence of the persons who sent in these reports would not show what the reports were. Although we can understand that the substance of their evidence would be exactly the same, still in strict law they would not be the reports, and the only way to show that these statements were true was by producing the reports. On that point I think the evidence was improperly rejected, and of course I speak now merely upon the prima facie statement of counsel, and without having heard the other side as to the ground of their rejection. I think there should be a rule on that ground, but at the same time if, on consideration of the whole case, it depended upon that, I would never consent to a new trial being granted. There are only two points that have been raised. I may add also, in reference to the article, as had been stated by his Honor, that, so far as I can judge without having read the greater portion of the evidence, my opinion is also that a great public benefit was conferred in all probability by the publication of this article, and although I am not prepared to say that the damages were too high, it may be that I think they were. I am not prepared to say so, simply for this reason, that juries as a general rule are the best judges of these things. They hear everything, and in this case they had a plea of justification set before them, which they found was not established, and it is quite possible that having taken that into consideration they were induced to give heavier damages than they otherwise would have done. But that ground is not taken, so that I cannot consider the matter. As the law now stands juries are the absolute judges of the law and the facts. It is their duty to say whether an article is a libel or not, and they are entitled to consider the law and the facts, and form their own conclusions. The Judge is bound, no doubt, to state to them his opinion of the law; he is bound to point out them the law as referring to the particular case before him, and when all that is done, it he states the law correctly, the matter rests then, both as to the law and the facts, with the jury. And it seems to me that there is growing up a dissatisfaction with the state of the law, and that those people who are most intimately concerned in matters of this kind are anxious to set aside the functions of a jury and deprive them of that right which for about 80 years they struggled so hard for in England. They obtained it after long struggles, and simply in consequence of prosecutions being instituted against a number of persons they succeeded in obtaining a reform in the law in these criminal matters, until the Judges extended the application of the law to civil actions for libel. So the law stands at the present time. I confess that I, for one, have very great regard for the assistance of a jury in cases of this kind, and wherever a question arising between man and man is concerned, wherever the freedom of any person or public institution or semi-public institution is concerned, I have great regard for the opinion of a jury, and I believe that nothing will be done to disturb or affect the power of a jury, and that the law will remain as it is. I am of opinion on the facts I have mentioned, that there ought to be a rule.

Sir George Innes: There is no ground in this motion by reason of the damages being excessive, and the case has been heard upon the ex parte argument of counsel for the defendants. And it may possibly be that without having as full an acquaintance with the facts of the case as they were presented to myself as the Judge, or to the jury whose special and exclusive function it was to decide the question, expressions of opinion on the matter have fallen from the Chief Justice incidentally in reference to the merits of this case. I, for my part, think that expression of opinion would have been considerably modified had his Honor had the same advantages as were possessed by the jury. However, as I have pointed out, we have nothing whatever to do with that question. Counsel for the defendants did not think it was arguable with regard to the question of the excessiveness of the damages, and although there are ten points and every conceivable phase that could occur to the astute minds of those who arranged the defence, yet this never occurred to them. One of the grounds that have been taken amounts to this, that the verdict was against evidence. That has not been backed up by argument. Mr. Darley has properly admitted that that question could not be properly argued. Then the application is narrowed down to two points, one, that the reports referred to in one of the defamatory articles were erroneously rejected by me, and the other and far more important point, that I was wrong in my direction to the jury that this was not a case of privilege properly so called. All the other points resolve themselves into that most important point. I therefore say nothing with reference to the ground taken that the verdict was against evidence, and I must take it as being confessed that there was evidence to support the verdict of the jury. With regard to the rejection of these reports, what are the facts? In the second article complained of a statement occurred that defendants had had an opportunity of seeing these reports, and that the reports more than corroborated what they had previously stated. More than that, the article goes on to give many quotations from these two reports, and what purports to be a summary of them. Then that is followed by an innuendo with regard to the first part of it, that the persons who had sent in the reports formed a more unfavourable conclusion than the defendants, and because that innuendo is put in, it is said that the plaintiffs should allow the reports themselves to go in. The reports were alluded to, and the objection insisted upon, and it seemed to me I had no other duty to discharge than to reject them. I agree with the Chief Justice in thinking that these reports were properly rejected. No evidence was given by the plaintiff, nor did they think it worth their while to care what opinions were formed by Dr. Egan and Inspector Cotter. The cause of the reports were the articles in the Herald, and it became incumbent upon the defendants, unless they could show that it was a privileged communication, to show that the allegations in the second report were also true under the second plea. Of course, I do not advert to the other and generally essential element of justification under our law, that it was for the public benefit, because from first to last it was conceded that, if these statements were true, their publication was manifestly for the public benefit. The defamatory article said "these reports more than corroborated the statements we have made," and, as I said when rejecting these reports, it came to this: A writes to B a letter containing a number of defamatory charges against B, and C publishes them. B brings his action against C for publishing certain statements in the letter, accompanying it with the statement that "the information we have received contains still more serious charges," and because he says this he is to be at liberty to publish the statements. His Honor the Chief Justice properly held that that this question is clearly established in the case of M'Pherson and Daniels, followed by the more recent case of Watkin v. Hall. Now, with regard to the more important question as to whether this was a privileged occasion, properly so called. His Honor, the Chief Justice, with whom I entirely concur, has so clearly and so exhaustively pointed out the fallacy that there was any such privilege under the circumstances existing here, that I do not intend follow him at any great length. But I adopt at this point of the case the language of Mr. Justice Blackburn at the commencement of his judgment in the case of Campbell v. Spottiswoode: "The question in this case appears to me so very clear to me that I think we should do wrong to cast any doubt upon it by granting a rule." I never at the trial had the slightest doubt that the direction to the jury was right, and I have no such doubts since; and I think it would be an entire mistake to let it go forth by granting a rule nisi that there was any doubt in the minds of the Court on this clearly established law. The whole contention was, up to a recent period of the argument, that this privilege was one peculiarly attachable to the press. His Honor Mr. Justice Faucett agrees with his Honor the Chief Justice and myself in thinking that that contention is not tenable, that there is no peculiar privilege attaching to a newspaper, or to the proprietors or publishers of a newspaper, beyond that possessed by every other member of a community, who, as I fully pointed out to the jury, have a perfect right to comment in the most free and unrestrained manner upon the public acts of public persons. But that is not a right peculiar in any way to the proprietors of a newspaper. Now, in this case of Campbell v. Spottiswoode, upon the lines of which I desired my summing up to go—because I have no hesitation in saying I did not advert to the question of privilege properly so called, as I did not entertain the idea that such a law was applicable in this case—what does Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, whose somewhat loose expressions in other cases of nisi prius have been pointed by the Chief Justice, say in his summing up? It is given in 32 Law Journal, Queen's Bench, at page 185 and following pages. In the first place on the matter of placing the whole article before the jury he says, "The article was very properly, at my suggestion, read to you at length, and you have had a full opportunity of understanding and appreciating the whole tenor of this particular article," and so on. He proceeds: "A writer has a perfect right to come forward and denounce a scheme as either defective or mischievous; and if you think that is all that has been done, my duty is to tell you that it is within the fair legitimate scope of public criticism and review, and that you ought to find a verdict for the defendant. But the question is, whether the writer here has not gone beyond these limits; whether he has not gone the length of imputing to Dr. Campbell, not merely that he has proposed to the public a defective, delusive scheme—a mischievous scheme—but that he has done so with the sordid and base motive of abusing the confidence of the public upon subjects the most high, sacred, and important, for the purpose—the pitiful, base, sordid purpose—of putting pence into his own pocket. If you think that, then the case seems to me to assume a different character. The learned counsel for the defendant says the circumstances were such as, fairly, not only to entitle the writer in the Saturday Review to criticise in the spirit of the most adverse hostile criticism this scheme of Dr. Campbell, but also to impute to Dr. Campbell sordid and base motives in making this proposal for subscriptions to his paper; because it is obvious that the thing was so sordid and vile, it was so impossible that it could do good to anybody except the proprietors of the paper, that you must couple bad motives with the scheme in itself so inherently rotten and defective. I own that my view of the law does not go along with that propounded by the learned counsel. I think any man is fairly entitled to comment on the conduct of public men. I quite agree that this was a public matter, put in a public newspaper before the public in such a manner as that it invited and was properly exposed to any amount of criticism and comment. But I do not assent that you may go further, and say that because a man is a public man you are entitled, not only to point out the want of judgment, the want of discretion, the want of wisdom in his conduct, but that you may ascribe to him corrupt, dishonest, and wicked motives. I do not think that the privilege of a public writer goes to the extent which is contended for." There is the sense in which the Lord Chief Justice uses the word privilege. Not in a technical or legal sense of a privileged occasion or communication, but merely that he has that privilege which is common to himself and every other member of the community—that he has a right to do it. Chief Justice Cockburn says: "Take the case of a statesman: his public conduct is open, of course, to criticism from his opponents; open to public criticism either in speech or writing. It would be very unfortunate if it were not. But have you a right to say that such a man has sold himself, that he is inspired by base and sordid motives, unless you are prepared to justify that in a court of justice, and to prove it true?" And so on. He repeats the same thing on the same lines:—"I think you have a right to comment upon the conduct of public men, upon the propriety of their conduct, upon its wisdom, upon its discretion and its policy. All those are matters which fairly come under discussion upon public topics, which are every day agitating public men, and becoming the subject of public discussion; but when you dive into the hearts and bosoms of men, and represent them as acting, where you think they have acted erroneously, not from want of judgment or from want of politic or wise views, but from base or sordid motives, when you attach personal probity, honesty, and honour, I think you ought to have something more solid and substantial to found your allegations upon than the mere suggestion of a vague belief, which antagonism, arising either from political or religious controversy, would otherwise be too apt to inspire. It would be disastrous, indeed, to the public character, which is essential to the maintenance of our institutions and the maintenance of our national honour, if every man's motives and every man's honour might be impugned, simply because those whom political or religious antagonism, or any other source of hostility, might affect, in whose minds these motives might operate, had a ready tendency to take an adverse view of the motives of their opponents." Well, those are questions of motives—motives by which they were actuated in bringing forward this claim. But here in this case there are distinct specific charges of gross misconduct, and it is contended that the writer in a public newspaper can make charges of that kind and rely simply on his privileged communication if he honestly and bona fide made them, believing them to be true. The fallacy of that is shown, and cannot be too clearly understood; and the Court is unanimous in rejecting such a view as that. Then a distinction is sought to be drawn that because there were invitations—invitations which assume the character of importunity—on the part of Mr. Anderson or his wife to go over and see this place and inspect it—make any examination you like, and write an article to appear in the public press—there was some relationship established between the parties which made it analogous to the question of privilege. But is there any such relationship established? As the learned Chief Justice pointed out yesterday, does a person inviting another to go over and report upon his place and publish the report in his newspaper, constitute him a judge to take evidence and publish it, putting before the world these defamatory statements which he hears, when these statements are absolutely and utterly untrue. In a case of this kind it is just the same when statements are not true as when they are not proved to be true. Mr. Justice Faucett has pointed out, with regard to a good deal of what is relied upon in this declaration, that even the invitation does not cover the publication of these defamatory statements. For, although there is an invitation to go there and examine these boys, that is no justification for going to another place and examining other boys who had been there before. And what does the declaration say:—"But the most serious statement against the place" (meaning the said institution) "was made by a boy who left it three months ago after a stay of two years there, and who is now at North Shore, learning his trade. His statement was as follows." And then they go on, and there are more statements put forward—a number of most defamatory and most injurious things, of which no evidence is given. It must be borne in mind what is the character of the invitation given, and whether it establishes between the parties the relationship I have mentioned. As his Honor admits, the invitation does not cover that. With respect to the statements made by persons on the premises or belonging to the premises at the particular time, it will come to this: an actor performing nightly before the public asks some person—a reporter—to bring his performance before the public, and tells him that he may do so not only as to the way in which the actor performs, but as to his habits behind the scenes. But because a man has been invited in that way, and, it may be, importuned to go, is he to get into some conversation with some other actors or scene-shifters, and hearing from them that the actor comes there constantly in a state of drunkenness, is guilty of gross indecency, and is habitually making use of obscene language, go and publish those statements simply because he has been invited to go and see how this man conducts his business? A reporter may do so, but if he does he must do it at the risk of proving that these things are true, just as everybody else would have to do. It may seem a somewhat extreme case, but I can imagine that a Judge himself, either in this court or public chambers, seeing no reporters present, might be on friendly terms with the proprietors of a newspaper, and might say, "Why don't you send somebody up, and have a report in your paper as to how matters are carried on?" And he may do that more than once, and then a man is sent up, and when he comes up, he gets into communication with the officers of the court. He might be told that one of the Judges came down to his seat in a state of drunkenness, and once fell off; and that he misbehaved himself in a variety of ways. Then this person writes statements to that effect, and afterwards attempts to escape from his responsibility on the ground that he believed them to be bona fide true. If they are true, unquestionably he has a right to publish them, but he must be prepared to establish their truth when an action is brought against him. It seems to me that this invitation goes no further than the right of a person who has a right to comment upon the public acts of public persons; and if he does so he can do so in a free and unrestrained manner, so long as he is prepared to prove these charges. It would have been a different thing if, as the Chief Justice yesterday suggested, Mr. Anderson or his wife had said to the proprietors of editor of the Herald, "Send your reporter over; we have plenty of confidence in what he may hear, and he may question the boys and publish their information." Then Anderson would have no right to complain, so long as they could establish that the statements had been given to them by the boys. I am of opinion that that is where the defendants failed, and that that was not the character of the invitation between the parties. On the grounds I have stated, I think the rule ought to be refused.

Rule by majority refused.

Mr. Darley: With reference to my not having asked for a rule on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, I may explain that I withdrew that plea on the express instructions of the defendants, who simply desired the law points to be argued.

Sir James Martin: The rule having been refused, I wish to say that the attention of the Court has been called to an article in the Echo of the 21st June in reference to the case of Anderson v. Fairfax, and to a series of articles in the Sydney Morning Herald of the 26th June last, headed "The Anderson libel case," containing attacks upon the Judge before whom the case was tried. I think these attacks are of such a character that they should be taken notice of. I need not say more than this now; but I direct the Prothonotary to take the necessary steps to bring the publishers of these papers before the Court on Monday week to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt.

GILLESPIE V. M'NAB.

Mr. O'Connor moved for a rule nisi to set aside a verdict in an action which had been tried before the District Court Judge at Orange, in which the plaintiff had recovered from the defendant the sum of £49 0s. 9d, for the non-performance of a contract.

The plaintiff had engaged to supply the defendant with straw, and the defence was that the defendant had never accepted the contract so that it should be good within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, as there was no written memorandum or any part payment. On these grounds the rule was applied for, and also on account of the improper admittance and rejection of certain evidence.

The Court refused the rule, for the reason that there being sufficient evidence of acceptance and receipt, the verdict would not be affected.

EX PARTE SOUTAR.

Mr. Foster and Mr. Rogers for the appellant; Mr. Darley, Q.C., and Mr. Bruce Smith for the respondents.

This was a motion to make absolute a rule nisi for a prohibition against Mr. George Howell, the inspector of markets, and the magistrate who tried the case in which the appellant had been convicted of bringing in empty cases, and thus obstructing the market place, contrary to the bylaws. The ground for the rule was that the information had not been laid by the officer duly appointed and authorised for that purpose by the municipal council.

For the respondents Mr. Darley raised the preliminary objection that the point had not been taken in the Court below.

It was held, however, that, as the defect could not have been cured even if taken below, the appellant had not waived his right to take it now. As to the merits of the case, it was admitted by the respondent's counsel that Mr. Howell was not empowered to prosecute.

The rule for prohibition was made absolute, without costs.

In the Vice-Admiralty Court.—(Before the Deputy Judge, Mr. Justice WINDEYER.)

THE SHIP NORTHAMPTON.

GEORGE HILL, JUN., OWNER OF THE CIVILITY (S.) V. THE OWNERS OF THE SHIP NORTHAMPTON.

Mr. Darley, Q.C., Mr. C. J. Manning, and Mr. Cohen, instructed by Mr. Marshall, for the promovent; Dr. Sly, instructed by Mr. G. J. Sly, for the respondent.

The case for the promovent was that about 10 p.m. on the 20th October, 1882, as the steamer Civility, trading between Kiama and Sydney, was off Coalcliff, signals of distress in the form of blue lights and rockets were observed on her starboard bow. The master, Mr. Stanley Brown, immediately steered for the point whence they were shown, and on the way picked up a boat containing the mate of the Dairymaid and some of the passengers of the Northampton, from whom he learned that the latter ship had, with nearly 400 immigrants on board, struck against some hidden rocks, and was taking in water fast. The Civility at once made for the Northampton, which was by this time so near shore that Captain Brown hesitated to go between her and land. On getting alongside of her a number of the passengers crowded on board of the Civility, which towed the distressed ship for some distance, and received great damage to her rigging and shaft. Finally the Northampton was beached at La Perouse.

A number of witnesses were called in support of the promovent's case, amongst them being Captain Stanley Brown, the master, and George Henderson, the engineer, of the Civility, as well as certain passengers on board the Northampton. For the respondents evidence was called to prove that the Civility had never been invited to assist the Northampton, and that the captain of the latter vessel had warned her off, but that on her coming near such a noise was made by the emigrants that his orders were not heard, the passengers making a general stampede on board the Civility. It was further pleaded that the Northampton had not been towed along at all, but that the only assistance she had derived from the Civility was to get rid of some of her passengers.

When the Court rose, the evidence was just concluded, and judgment was reserved.

In Equity.—(Before his Honor Mr. Justice FAUCETT), in Chambers.

RE TRUSTS H. DENNE'S WILL.

His HONOR settled the minutes in this matter, and directed that the chief clerk should draw up the terms of the order.

DOYLE V. FINLAY.

Mr. H. F. Barton moved to continue the injunction in this matter until the hearing.

His HONOR directed the matter to stand over till next motion day, the other side to have notice in the meanwhile.

ELLIS AND ANOTHER V. MOSSMAN.

The time for filing a statement of defence in this foreclosure suit having gone by, and there having been no denial of the facts as alleged by the plaintiffs, Mr. Lingen moved for the appointment of a receiver.

His Honor granted the application.

SMITH AND OTHERS V. KEARNEY AND OTHERS.

Mr. W. G. Walker appeared for the plaintiffs Smith and wife and Wm. M'Donald, and Mr. Knox for Frank M'Donald; Mr. Owen, Q.C., and Mr. A. H. Simpson for the defendant Plomley, and Mr. Harris for the trustees, Messrs. Kearney and Edward M'Donald.

This suit came before the Court for further directions. It was instituted for the purpose of ascertaining who were entitled to the residuary estate of Henry Linden, and the late Primary Judge's decree, dispensing with one of the defendants on the ground of illegitimacy, and dealing with a certain bequest to Archbishop Vaughan for charitable purposes, had been upheld by the Full Court. Reference was then made to the Master to ascertain what were the particulars of the residuary estate, who were entitled to it, and what were the several interests. The Master, considering that there were difficult points of law to be decided, thought it necessary that he should report upon the facts only, and leave it to the Court to decide who were entitled to the estate.

The arguments were part heard and adjourned for a week.

METROPOLITAN QUARTER SESSIONS.

FRIDAY.

(Before Mr. District Court Judge WILKINSON.)

Mr. Clark Irving prosecuted on behalf of the Crown.

UNLAWFULLY WOUNDING.

Susan O'Leary was charged with having on the 22nd of June unlawfully and maliciously wounded Alice Meerhoff. The defendant pleaded not guilty and was defended by Mr. H. Levien. The prosecutrix and the defendant were neighbours at Forest Lodge. On the date mentioned Mrs. Meerhoff was hanging up some clothes on the fence which divided her yard from the defendant's yard. The defendant ordered her to take the clothes off the fence when the prosecutrix refused, and the defendant, according to the prosecutrix, then struck her on the head with a clothes prop. The defendant's story was that she was trying to push the clothes off the fence when she accidentally hit the prosecutor on the head. Evidence was given on behalf of the defendant to the effect that she had for years borne a high character as a very quiet and respectable woman. The jury, after half an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict of guilty of common assault. His Honor said the jury had apparently been influenced by the evidence as to character to take a merciful view of the case, and he was glad that they had done so. He ordered the defendant to pay a penalty of £5.

PERJURY.

Benjamin Jarrett was charged with having committed perjury in a case at Newtown. He was convicted of allowing his horses to stray at Marrickville, and he was now charged with having falsely sworn that the horses in respect of which the charge of straying was made, were not his. The defendant, who was defended by Mr. Gannon, was acquitted.

The following is the list of cases set down for trial on Monday:—Richard M'Knight, attempt to personate; John Couch, larceny; George Sharpe, attempt to commit suicide; Frederick Parkes, larceny; Matthew Fegan, assault; Joseph Stapleton, stealing from the person; William M'Alister, larceny.

CORRUPTLY TAKING A REWARD.

At the Quarter Sessions yesterday, before Mr. District Court Judge Wilkinson, Ralph Riley, formerly a member of the detective force, was arraigned on a charge of corruptly taking a reward for the restoration of certain property which had been stolen or fraudulently appropriated or fraudulently retained. The information was as follows:—"1. That Ralph Riley on the 12th day of July, 1883, at Sydney feloniously and corruptly did take a certain sum of money to wit, £3, upon account of helping Henry O'Brien Wilson, to certain property, to wit, one scarf pin, the property of the said Henry O'Brien Wilson, before then feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away, he, the said Ralph Riley, not having used all due diligence to cause the person by whom the said scarf pin was so feloniously stolen as aforesaid to be brought to trial for the same. 2. That the said Ralph Riley feloniously and corruptly did take a certain sum of money, to wit, £3, upon account of helping the said Henry O'Brien Wilson to the said scarf pin, the property of the said Henry O'Brien Wilson, before then unlawfully and fraudulently appropriated to his own use by a certain other person unknown to the Crown Prosecutor, he, the said Ralph Riley, not having used all due diligence to cause the said other person to be brought to trial for the same. 3. That the said Ralph Riley feloniously and corruptly did take a certain sum of money, to wit £3, upon account of helping the said Henry O'Brien Wilson to the recovery of the said scarf pin, the property of the said Henry O'Brien Wilson, before then unlawfully and fraudulently, and in order to procure a reward for the restoration of the same, retained by a certain other person to the Crown Prosecutor unknown, the said Ralph Riley not having used all due diligence to cause the said other person to be brought to trial for the same." Mr. P. J. Healy prosecuted on behalf of the Crown, and the accused was defended by Mr. H. Levien and Mr. Wallace. The following were empannelled as the jury:—William Frank Waters, butcher; John Henricks, fruiterer; James Johnson, writing clerk; John Morgan, tailor; Robert Kelso, grocer; William Jackson Smith, jeweller; John Hogan, mechanic; John O'Brien, coachbuilder; Henry Welch, yeoman; Thomas Jones, fruiterer; James John Yeends, gentleman; Barnet Bebarfield, general dealer. The accused challenged seven jurors before the required 12 were obtained.

Mr. Healy, in opening the case, explained that there were three counts in the information, under anyone of which the accused might be convicted. If they found that the pin had been stolen by some person, it did not matter whom, that the defendant had received money for the restoration of the pin, and that he had failed to use due diligence to bring the thief to justice, they should find the accused guilty under the first count. If they found that the pin had not been stolen, but fraudulently appropriated by some person, that the accused had received money for its restoration, and that he had failed to use due diligence in bringing the offender to justice, they would find the accused guilty. If they found that the pin had been neither stolen nor fraudulently appropriated, but that it had been fraudulently retained by some person for the purpose of obtaining a reward, that the accused received money for its restoration, and that he failed to use due diligence to bring the offender to justice, they would return a verdict of guilty.

The following evidence was given in support of the prosecution:—

Detective Wilmott deposed that he had arrested the accused on this charge; the accused had a private inquiry office in the Royal Arcade.

By Mr. Levien: He had received instructions from Inspector Camphin in this matter; he did not know that Mr. Wilson was a magistrate; Riley was formerly a member of the detective force, but resigned about three months ago; he had heard that Camphin and Riley were not on speaking terms.

Henry O'Brien Wilson deposed: I am a grazier, living on the Richmond River; I was in Sydney two or three months ago; on the evening of the 7th July I and some others went into a billiard-room in Castlereagh-street; it was about 7 or 8 o'clock; there was a row in the room while I was there; after the disturbance was over I missed a scarf pin which I had been wearing before I went in; it must have been rubbed out or pulled out in the row; it could not have dropped out; I mentioned at the time that I had lost the pin; I received a letter from Riley in reference to this matter, in consequence of which I went to Riley's office in the Royal Arcade; I said to him, "I have come to see you in reference to the memo. you sent me about my pin:" he said, "Oh, all right; how much are you prepared to give?" I said £1, and he said that would not be enough, as he would have to pay the person who had the pin £2, and would expect £1 for his own trouble; I paid him the £2 then; he asked me to call again next morning, and I did so, when he gave me the pin and I gave him the other £1; Riley said that the person who had returned the pin was going to Queensland; Riley did not tell me his name, nor did he suggest that I should prosecute him; I have not heard of the offender being since proceeded against; the following is the letter I received from Riley:—"74, Royal Arcade, 12th July, 1883. H. O'B. Wilson, Esq. Sir,—If you will call at my office at 6 p.m. this evening I will be able to assist you in recovering the pin stolen from you in Castlereagh-street the other evening. I remain, yours faithfully, R. M. RILEY, per E. W. C." There was a business card marked "late Morse and Riley" attached to the letter.

By a juror: I did not ask Riley who the man was who returned the pin, I and did not suggest that he should prosecute him.

By Mr. Levien: I did not show the letter to Riley, and will not swear that this was the only letter sent to me in reference to the pin; I never at any time suggested that any proceedings should be taken in reference to the person had the pin; I have no doubt that the pin was lost; I offered a reward immediately I discovered the loss, and it was no secret that a reward was offered; I remember telling Riley that I had so much confidence in the way in which he got the pin that I would reward him if he got for me a gold nugget that I lost, and which I prized; I went to see Inspector Camphin about this matter after I had paid Riley the money; I went to Camphin of my own accord; I did so because somebody suggested to me that I would get into trouble myself; Camphin told me to go to the Central Police Station and lay an information; my former statement, that "but for Mr. Camphin I would not have taken any action in the matter" is quite correct; from the hour I lost the pin to the present moment I have never asked Riley for the name of the person who returned the pin; I have never suggested to any member of the police force that Riley should be asked the name of the person who returned the pin; I think I lost the pin through being jostled about in the room; I did not take off my coat in the room; I am certain that the pin was not lost outside the room; I did tell the marker that I was afraid if the pin was lost in the room it would be trodden upon; I was a bit fresh; I had, I think, five glasses of drink.

William Lees, examined by Mr. Healy, deposed: I keep a billiard-room in Castlereagh-street; I remember the night of Saturday, 7th July; on that night Mr. Wilson came into the room with Mr. Maddock and some other gentlemen; after a couple of games of billiards had been played, there was a row in the room; on the Saturday following, Riley showed me a summons which he had received to appear at the Police Court upon this charge; he said it appeared to be a rather serious matter; I then went to Mr. Wilson to hush the matter up, because I was afraid that the exposure would injure my billiard business.

By Mr. Levien: Mr. Wilson was in the midst of the scuffle; he had his coat off, and if it had not been for him there would have been no disturbance; there was some altercation about a prize fight for £50; Mr. Wilson told me that he had lost the pin and offered 10s. reward for it, and that was made generally known in the room; on the following Monday, when he saw me again in reference to the prize fight, he told me that he would give a sovereign reward.

Mr. Maddock, examined by Mr. Healy, deposed: I went into Lees' billiard room on the 7th July, in company with Mr. Wilson; there was a disturbance in the room; just after we left the room Mr. Wilson told me that he had lost the pin.

By Mr. Levien: This was four or five minutes after we left the room; I saw Mr. Wilson in the act of taking his coat off.

Hy. O'B. Wilson, recalled by Mr. Levien, deposed: I received the letter from Riley on the 12th, and saw him the same day, and gave him the £2 to pay the reward; on the 13th I paid him the other £1 and got the pin, and on the 14th I gave information to the police about the matter.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The following evidence was given for the defence:—

John Evans, examined by Mr. Levien, deposed: I am in the employ of Riley, the accused; the letter produced was not written by Riley, but I believe by the office boy; Riley asked me to write a letter to Wilson about the pin, and I went down to the office with that intention, but I had an appointment, and did not have time to write the letter, so I asked the boy to write the letter; Riley did not see the letter, and did not know what its contents were; Riley was away the day the letter was written and sent to Mr. Wilson; the pin was given to me by a man whose name I do not know; Riley was not there when the pin was brought into the office; I paid the man the £2 reward; Riley had told me that there was £2 in the drawer, which was to be paid as a reward to whoever might bring the pin back; I was called as a witness by the Crown when Riley was charged with this offence last Tuesday; I gave evidence for the prosecution on that occasion, but I have not been called by the Crown to-day as a witness for the prosecution.

By Mr. Healy: The office boy who wrote the letter was about 19 or 20 years of age; the office staff consists of another man, besides the boy; I did not give the boy any special directions in writing the letter, but merely asked him to write a letter to Mr. Wilson requesting him to call at the office with reference to the pin; Riley did not tell me anything about the means whereby the pin was recovered; he told me that Wilson was offering a reward for the pin: I did not know where the pin was; I did not know the man who brought the pin back; I took a description of the man, and I have it in my book, but I have not got the book with me; he was a little dark man, with pointed whiskers; he said he was going to Queensland; he said he found the pin; he did not say whether he had seen Riley; I asked him where he heard that there was a reward offered for the pin, and he said he had heard it at the Commercial Hotel; I met Riley on the evening of the day that Wilson had been at the office, and he told me that a reward of £2 had been offered; that same night I went round to the hotels, and made it known that this reward had been offered; I was present when Mr. Wilson received the pin; he was accompanied by a Mr. Kirby, who gave Mr. Wilson the £1 to give to Riley; Kirby was a witness for the Crown at the Central Police Court, but he has not been called here to-day.

Evidence as to character was given by Richmond Thatcher and Isaac Israel.

Mr. Levien addressed the jury for the defence.

His HONOR, in charging the jury, submitted the following questions to them:—"1. Was the pin stolen by a person unknown? 2. Was the pin fradulently appropriated by a person unknown, although not taken originally with a fraudulent intent? 3. Was the pin fraudulently retained by a person unknown, in order to procure a reward for its restoration? 4. Has Riley used due diligence to cause such unknown person to be brought to trial for such offence? 5. Did Riley, when he received the money, intend, as far as he could, to bring the offender to justice?"

The jury, after two hours' deliberation, returned a verdict of not guilty, and the accused was discharged from custody.

POLICE.

CENTRAL POLICE COURT.

Mr. Clarke, S.M., presided on the bench in the Central Police Charge Court yesterday.

A number of cases of drunkenness were dealt with.

Edward Murphy, on a charge of having been found on the premises of Mr. Inglis for an unlawful purpose, was sentenced to be imprisoned for three months, with hard labour. Mr. Inglis had left his office for a few minutes, and on returning found the prisoner in the room near the safe, which had been left open.

William Henry Rutland, an accountant, was charged with having obtained the sum of 5s. from Joseph Noble by means of a false pretence. It appeared that the accused gave Noble an order for £4 on Messrs. Brunker and Wolfe, Maitland, and obtained from him, on the strength of the order, the sum of 5s. When the order was presented it was found that the accused had no account with Messrs. Brunker and Wolfe. This was the first case of this kind heard under the new procedure, and the accused elected to be tried by the magistrate, and pleaded guilty, stating in extenuation that he had been drunk when he committed the offence. He had previously received at Maitland a sentence for forgery. He was sentenced to be imprisoned for six months.

Catherine Williamson, on a charge of having wilfully damaged a pair of uniform trousers, valued at £1 2s. 6d., the property of the New South Wales Government, was fined 40s., or, in default, imprisonment for 21 days.

Thomas M'Kay, aged 27 years, was charged with having stolen the sum of £1 16s., the property of Mary Ann M'Gowan. The prosecutrix, residing at the Glebe, deposed that on Thursday evening she was in the house of prisoner's mother, and he asked her to go upstairs, and prosecutrix refusing to do so he struck her, and knocking her down put his hand in her pocket and stole £1 16s. from her; prosecutrix was a little the worse of drink, but remembered all that took place; the prisoner was drunk. Constable Parry deposed to the arrest of the accused, who on being charged said, "There is another three months for me, and I have only just come out;" the prosecutrix's eye was marked, and the prisoner's hand was bleeding. Mary M'Kay, mother of the accused, deposed that she had seen the prosecutrix in her house on Thursday; she did not see her son strike the woman; he only told her to go out, and she did so. The prisoner was sentenced to be imprisoned for three months.

Mr. Dillon presided on the bench in the Summons Court yesterday.

A number of breaches of the Police Act, &c., were dealt with.

Henry J. Hough was charged with having unlawfully obtained from Stanley Forbes the sum of £60 by means of a false pretence. The prosecutor said he had been an auctioneer and resided in Paddington. On the 19th June he was in Elizabeth-street and saw a notice outside an agent's shop to the effect that a partner was wanted in an auctioneer's business, the partner to put £80 into the business. He interviewed the agent, Mr. Peer, who introduced him to the defendant, who gave him one of his cards, setting out that Hough and Co. were auctioneers, land agents, &c. Hough then introduced him to a Mr. Barrett, who he said was a J.P., and had just joined him as a partner; defendant said his business brought in an income of from £25 to £30 a week, and that he could not attend to it all himself, and that although he had taken in one partner there was room for another; and if the prosecutor joined him he would dismiss his assistant. Prosecutor asked him the nature of his business, and he replied that it was the usual business of an auctioneer and hotel broker, and he showed him a book containing entries of business transactions which had passed through his hands as an auctioneer; he said he required £100 for a share in the business; after some conversation, however, he agreed to take prosecutor into the business on payment of £60 cash, and two promissory notes, one for £10, and another for £30; it was arranged that the prosecutor should begin work on June 25; upon that day he went to the office, and Mr. Barrett, one of the partners, left, and did not return for 28 days; during that time the defendant called at the office two or three times; there was no auctioneering or other business done during that time, and prosecutor found that the defendant had not an auctioneer's license, and the book shown him contained entries of business done two or three years ago; there were no books showing any auction sales, but there were books showing hotel brokerage and commission from £130 to £140 during the time defendant had been in business. By Mr. Wallace, who appeared for the defendant—Prosecutor heard that defendant had been ill, which accounted for his absence from the office. Alex. Barrett, who had been a partner of the defendant, deposed that he remembered the introduction of the prosecutor into the firm; witness himself had only been a few days in the business, and was not conversant with its transactions; he agreed to the prosecutor entering the partnership, understanding him to be an auctioneer; there had been no business done since witness was connected with the firm; he had paid £70 to enter the partnership a few days before the prosecutor; he understood defendant had an auctioneer's license when he joined him. Alfred Peer, a commission agent, carrying on business in Elizabeth street, deposed that on the 19th June, in consequence of a notice outside his (Peer's) door, the prosecutor called on him and witness introduced him to Hough; from a conversation he had with the defendant he believed him to be an auctioneer, hotel broker, land and estate agent, and in all that kind of business; witness wrote out an agreement; the defendant said there was produce sold at Darling Harbour every morning through his firm, and he (defendant) was there, but he did not say he sold it. Thomas John Barns deposed that he had been a clerk to the defendant since February last; there had not been business done to the amount of £25 to £30 a week; he was not aware that there had been business done to realise any money since either Barrett or Hough joined; there was always a little business done until Barrett joined; there had been business done to the amount of £50 in one week; considerable business had been done in hotel brokerage; he knew it to be sometimes the usage for firms to employ a licensed auctioneer to sell goods for them; he knew the defendant had been ill; he had seen him in bed. The accused was committed to take his trial at the next Quarter Sessions. He was admitted to bail.

George Andrews, a publican, charged with Sunday trading, was fined £3, and Charles St. Ledger, who had been seen leaving the hotel on Sunday with liquor in his possession, was fined 10s.

DREDGING COOK'S RIVER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—The enterprising Victorian contractors, Messrs. C. and E. Miller, have demonstrated the fact beyond the shadow of a doubt that Cook's River should be dredged.

Although Cook's River is only navigable at high tide, the above contractors have freighted thousands of tons of timber to the Government Wharf at the Dam, also other material, showing the advantages of water communication over land.

They have just launched a steamer built expressly for conveying material up Cook's River, and if the river were navigable at low tide, it would act as a feeder for the Illawarra Railway, being the natural outlet to Botany Bay and George's River.

Cook's River is destined to be a large manufacturing centre, the two essentials being plenty of water and cheap coal. The whole of the country about there being surcharged with water, and cheap coal will be in galore after the completion of the railway, therefore it behoves the Government, being free trade in spirit, to be up and doing, and dredge Cook's River, that has been allowed to silt and fill in since it was discovered by Captain Cook.

Now that a very large population is settling down on either side, and as the Government are bringing the sewerage to Webb's grant, it will be incumbent upon them to confine the river to a channel, otherwise the health of the people will suffer. In fact, a living stream in the midst of an increasing population cannot be over estimated, and from a sanitary point of view alone it should be dredged. In European countries rivers are created—here, allowed to fill in.

I am, &c., CORNSTALK.

OUR readers will observe by the advertising columns of this issue that those well-known cheap drapers, Riley Brothers, have commenced to-day their 15th semi-annual sale of drapery, clothing, &c., at their Brickfield-hill and Oxford-street shops. Being very large importers, they are compelled to clear out their surplus stock every six months to make room for the new season's new shipments, thus enabling the public to save from 5s to 10s in every pound they have to lay out, as the prices at which the goods are sold on these occasions are really extraordinary.—[ADVT.]

ALEX. STUART.

NEW SOUTH WALES ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

The monthly meeting in connection with the Zoological Society was held at the gardens, Moore Park yesterday afternoon. Mr. Arthur T. Holroyd, president of the society, occupied the chair, and there was a fair attendance of members. Amongst the correspondence received was a letter from Mr. John H. Geddes, commissioner of fisheries, Phillip-street, Sydney, enclosing a copy of a communication which had been forwarded to him by Captain R. D'Espinasse, inspector of fisheries in Victoria, suggesting the advisability of the various acclimatisation societies in the colonies co-operating in the matter of introducing the herring to Australia, and recommending that a sum of money should be appropriated in the first instance for the purpose of making experiments as to its feasibility. The communication was referred for consideration to Dr. George Bennett, ex-president of the society. A statement of the financial condition of the society submitted showed that it had a credit balance in the bank of £693 13s. 5d. The secretary reported that, pursuant to the resolution at the last meeting, the sum of £1500 had been placed as a fixed deposit in the Bank of Australia at 6 per cent. for a term of 12 months, with the privilege of overdrawing the current account at 7 per cent. Accounts, amounting to £280 7s. 5d were paid during the month, and a sum of £339 15s. 2d. for the payment of other accounts was passed. The captain of the steamship Nelson was made an honorary member of the society in consideration of the fact that the elephant for the society was carried in the vessel from Hongkong free of charge. It was resolved to make a donation of £10 to him. The following additions had been made to the society's collection since last meeting, viz., two pairs of crested pigeons, presented by Mr. C. C. Skarrett; two rosella parrots, presented by an unknown donor; and a wallaby and a binchalong, which were acquired by purchase. A discussion took place with regard to obtaining a howdah for the elephant, and it was resolved to have one made at once.

Harrison, requesting that the water from culvert opposite his property on Burwood-road may be carried a few feet lower down, and that a footpath may be made. The road being maintained by the Government, the council cannot interfere. The Inspector of nuisances reported that he had given notice to the contractor for Public schools at Croydon, as to the cesspits, to avoid legal proceedings. At the request of the trustees of St. Paul's schoolroom, the rates upon the building were remitted. The offers for supply of map and lithographs of the borough were taken into consideration, and it was agreed, on the motion of Alderman Wedderburn, seconded by Alderman Broughton,—"That a map and lithographs of the borough be prepared by Higinbotham and Robinson, upon specifications being signed, at a cost of £65." On the order of the day for a footpath in Young-street, it was moved by Alderman Wedderburn, and seconded by Alderman Simson,—"That the footpath on the eastern side of Young-street be kerbed and made with ashes at a probable cost of £60." Carried. The council moved into committee for the consideration of tenders and of finance report, and, on resuming, adopted the report of the committee, recommending payment of accounts amounting to £129 2s. 4d. The tenders for 50 perches of stone for kerbing were deferred till next meeting, in the meantime additional tenders to be called for the labour in fixing the kerbing as per specification to be prepared by Alderman Sanders. At the close of the proceedings, the Mayor presented a cheque (which had been subscribed by the aldermen) to Alderman Beaver, covering the law costs he had incurred in his defence against recent legal proceedings in his capacity as returning-officer.—EDWARD FANN, Council Clerk.

THE PALLISER SHOT TRIALS.

Some gunnery experiments have been conducted by the Ordnance Committee at Shoeburyness, in which (writes the London correspondent of the Argus), the Australian colonies are interested. When the late Sir William Palliser died amongst his papers was found a design of a new pattern shot, which his brother, Captain Palliser, is endeavouring to bring into use. Some months ago Captain Palliser requested the Australian Governments to contribute towards the expense of making an exhaustive trial of the new shot, and the Governments of New South Wales and Victoria agreed to give £50 each. The Imperial Government undertook to conduct the experiments, provided Captain Palliser supplied the shot, the £100 received from the colonies being invested in a compound armour-plated target 6in. thick, 4in. being of wrought iron, with a facing of 2in. of steel. The shot, which was designed by Sir W. Palliser, is called a jacketed shot. It has a chilled iron body, over which a steel jacket of a peculiar form has been pressed. The idea of the shot is that the steel jacket will assist the penetration of the shot, but will itself remain embedded in the plate after the body of the projectile has passed through and broken up. Captain Palliser also submitted for experiment another kind of shot, the body as well as the jacket being of steel, but otherwise formed on the same principle as his brother's. The Royal Laboratory at Woolwich prepared two chilled iron shots with the view of pitting them against the Palliser shells. About three weeks ago the first experiments took place at Shoeburyness. Two compound armour plates were provided. The shot with the chilled body and the steel jacket failed to perpetrate the plate, but the Woolwich shot passed through, as also did the Palliser all-steel shot. The Ordnance Committee thereupon decided, upon the recommendation of Major-General Scratchley, who was watching the experiments on behalf of the Australian Governments, that another trial should be held with a service pattern chilled shot, in order to ascertain whether the penetrative power of the Woolwich shot was not due to the increased charge of powder used in firing all the projectiles experimented upon, viz., 20lb. of pebble powder. The gun employed was an 80-pounder converted Palliser gun, of which the New South Wales Government possesses 25. The Victorian Government possesses 23 80-pounders of wrought iron, which fire the same projectiles as the converted Palliser guns. The Ordnance Committee, which includes naval, artillery, and engineering officers, presided over by Sir Collingwood Dickson, R.A., considered that the first trials showed that there is no merit in the jacketed shot. The Ordnance Committee continued their experiments against the 6 inch compound plates at Shoeburyness, by firing two rounds from the 80-pounder converted muzzle-loading rifled gun. The projectiles were cored shot weighing 88lb., with two diameter heads service pattern, and of chilled iron, made by the Royal Laboratory at Woolwich Arsenal. The first round was fired with 20lb. of pebble powder at a distance of 70 yards. The projectile passed clean through the plate. The second round was fired with 17lb. of pebble powder, and also passed clean through the plate. The conclusion arrived at is that there is nothing to be gained from adopting the ribbed headed chilled shot, with steel jacket, proposed by Captain Palliser, as when fired from the same gun, at the same range, with 20lb. of pebble powder, it failed to penetrate the plate. Captain Palliser attributes the failure to the shot being badly chilled. The Ordnance Committee will shortly report the result of the experiments to Major-General Scratchley, who will forward it to the colonial Governments interested. The Gatling gun, with improved positive feed, was also tried, and fired over 4000 rounds without a hitch. The gun is considered a great success.

FRANCE AND THE VATICAN.—A Reuter's telegram dated Rome, May 30, says:—"The Journal de Rome, in an article to-day upon the relations between France and the Holy See, points out that the attitude of the French Government towards the Vatican will decisively affect the future of the present régime in France and of French influence abroad. It believes that a note has been delivered to the Vatican, couched in conciliatory terms, giving distinct assurances in regard to the religious question. The journal regards the statements recently made by MM. Jules Ferry and Martin Feuillée as significant indications, and concludes that the French Government intends to uphold the Concordat and the Budget of Public Worship without restrictions, and, in view of the Triple Alliance, to maintain relations with the Holy See. It observes that by tearing up the ancient pact with the Vatican France would deprive herself of a great international source of strength. 'Loyal and energetic resolutions,' concludes the article, 'are necessary. France has to choose between a rupture with violent atheistical radicalism and open war with the Vatican.'"

Messrs. G. R. Stevens and Co.'s chartered steamer Naples arrived yesterday from Hongkong with a cargo of Eastern produce (the bulk of which is for Sydney and Melbourne), besides nine bags of mails, six of which were for this port and three for Melbourne, and several passengers. This is the first time the Naples has appeared in Australian waters. She was built at Sunderland in 1875, and her dimensions are as follows:—328 feet long, 36 feet 6 inches beam, and 25 feet deep. Her hull is constructed of iron, she has a straight stem and an elliptical stern, and her carrying capacity is about 3000 tons, in addition to having a 1000 tons of coal in her bunkers. The engines of the Naples were supplied by the Sunderland Engine Works, and are compound surface condensing and direct acting, with cylinders of 36½ inches and 72 inches respectively, and a stroke of 48 inches. They are of 250 horse power nominal, make 52 revolutions a minute, and drive the ship along at an average speed of about 10 knots an hour. Although the Naples is primarily a cargo carrier, yet she has comfortable accommodation for about 50 passengers. The saloon is aft, and is nicely fitted up and decorated, while due care has been paid to ventilation, &c. Two large hatches fore and aft allow of the cargo being taken in and discharged rapidly, and steam winches are provided. The officers and the engineers' quarters are in the houses on deck, while the crew are accommodated forward. The ship is commanded from the bridge over the house on deck, from which the vessel is also steered by steam steering gear. For the saloon passengers a very nice promenade deck aft is provided, and is doubtless largely availed of in the warmer latitudes, in which the Naples has traded since she was launched. Captain George Willis, who is in command of the Naples, reports that she sailed from Hongkong at 4 p.m. on the 7th July, and had moderate S.S.W. winds to Mindora Passage, where she fell in with a heavy southerly gale, lasting for 24 hours. After that moderate S.E. winds and clear weather were met with until Port Darwin was reached at noon on July 18. The voyage was resumed at noon on the following day, and she arrived at Thursday Island at 8 a.m. on the 22nd. At 3 p.m. same date the Naples left Thursday Island in search of the steamship Teviotdale, which was reported to have broken down, and to be in want of assistance, at about 150 miles west of Booby Island. The Teviotdale was found there, taken in tow by the Naples at 8 a.m. on the 23rd, and brought to Thursday Island, where both vessels arrived safely on the 24th at 8 o'clock. At noon the Naples resumed her voyage to this port, and after calling at Cooktown on the 26th, Townsville on the 27th, and Rockhampton on the 29th July, arrived at Brisbane on the 1st instant at 8 a.m. She took her departure from Brisbane at 11 a.m., and entered the Heads at 9.30 a.m. yesterday. After a careful examination of the passengers and crew, Dr. Sibley granted the Naples pratique, and she steamed up to the Grafton Wharf. Strong S.E. winds and a head sea were experienced throughout the voyage from Thursday Island.

The Helen Nicoll (s.) left Grafton at 6 a.m. on the 1st instant; crossed the bar at 4.15 p.m., and entered the Heads at 2 a.m. on the 3rd. Strong S.E. winds and a heavy sea were experienced to Smoky Cape, thence light variable winds and moderate sea to the end of the voyage. Cargo: 1975 bags maize, 67 hides, 24 pigs, 6 coops poultry, 20 cases eggs, 666 bunches bananas, 25 hogsheads molasses, 61 pairs wild fowl, 18 baskets fish, 5 bales wool, 592 bags sugar, 2000 feet cedar, 80 bags tin ore, 129 ingots tin, 2 casks tallow.

The brig Wild Wave, from Mercury Bay with a cargo of sawn timber, entered the Heads at 11.30 a.m. yesterday, and was towed up to Russell's Foundry Wharf, Darling Harbour. She sailed on the 14th ultimo with light westerly winds, which continued for two days. Southerly and S.W. gales were experienced from that time until the 21st. The wind then set in from the southward, and continued in that quarter until the 26th, when it increased to a gale, and the vessel was hove-to for four days, during which there was a mountainous sea. Moderate S. and W. winds followed until the 2nd, from which date very light airs were had until arrival.

The barque Zodiac arrived yesterday afternoon from Port Mackay in ballast, and was towed to an anchorage in Johnston's Bay by the tug Glenelg. The voyage has been of the most tedious character; in fact with the exception of a few days of westerly winds and calms, she has had to contend with a succession of heavy gales veering from S.W. round to S.E., accompanied at times by a very heavy sea and rain squalls. The barque, however, received no damage.

Yesterday, the ship John Duthie was towed from the stream to a berth at Dibbs' Wharf.

The Egmont (s.) left Rockhampton on the 28th July, at 5 p.m.; Maryborough on the 30th, at 3 p.m.; Brisbane on the 1st August, at 10.30 a.m., and arrived in Sydney on the 3d instant, at noon. Experienced strong head winds and sea, with unsettled weather, throughout the passage.

The Corea (s.), from Thursday Island, arrived at Cooktown yesterday, and she brought 90 cases of pearlshell.

The Killarney (s.), from Melbourne to Newcastle, passed Gabo Island at 2.50 p.m. yesterday.

The steamship Newcomen sailed from Adelaide yesterday for Melbourne and Sydney. Messrs. Young and Lark are her agents.

The barque Elizabeth Nicholson, with coals for Manila, cleared the Heads at 2.40 p.m. yesterday.

The three-masted schooner Doris, for Mauritius, and the Berean, schooner, for River Mersey, cleared at the Customs yesterday.

The schooner that was signalled as N.E. off the port yesterday afternoon, proved to be the fore-and-aft schooner Queen, from Port Macquarie. She entered the Heads about 7 o'clock, and sailed up to an anchorage off Blue's Point.

The Port Jackson Steamboat Company's steamer Mystery is now on the A. S. N. Company's slip, receiving an overhaul.

Messrs. Tate and Muston's new steamer Karuah, which was built by Dunn, of North Shore, and is intended for the trade between Sydney and Port Stephens, is almost ready for sea. It is expected that she will leave for Port Stephens in a few days.

The Liguria (s.) left for London yesterday with a large cargo, but her passenger list was very limited.

The Catterthun (s.), from Sydney, arrived at Adelaide on Thursday.

The P. and O. Company's R.M.S. Pekin left Adelaide on Thursday, for London.

The M.M. steamer Dupleix, which left here on Thursday afternoon for Noumea, with mails, passengers, and cargo, did not return to port as it was expected she would. The accident which caused her to lie-to could not have been of a serious nature, as she proceeded on her voyage. The Commodore and Glenelg, steam tugs went in search of her on Thursday night, but could not find her, notwithstanding that they remained outside till yesterday morning. The Dupleix took the following passengers:—Mrs. H. Walker, Miss Dalman, Messrs. Knoblanch, H. Walker, Goudin, and A. Degritt.

A general abstract of the sworn returns of the average assets and liabilities and of the capital and profits of the banks of the colony for the quarter ended 30th June, was published in to-day's issue of the Government Gazette. The following are the aggregate figures, the total for the preceding quarter being given in brackets:—Liabilities: Notes in circulation, £1,613,563 [£1,674,870]; bills in circulation, £62,819 [£63,302]; balances due to other banks, £598,151 [£829,700]; deposits not bearing interest, £7,053,208 [£7,560,290]; deposits bearing interest, £15,795,552 [£15,321,090]; total liabilities, £25,153,296 [£25,449,253]. Assets: Coin, £2,801,716 [£2,946,432]; bullion, £73,883 [£131,354]; landed property, £733,043 [£708,503]; notes and bills of other banks, £113,098 [£106,374]; balances due from other banks, £3,330,150 [£3,379,427]; notes and bills discounted and all other debts due to the banks, £25,086,732 [£25,007,681]; total assets, £32,138,903 [£32,279,774]. It will be seen that the course of banking shows a further diminution in the amount of deposits not bearing interest, and an increase in the amount bearing interest, with a slight decrease in the total. There has been a decrease of about £200,000 in the amount of coin and bullion; while the amount of discounts and debts due to the banks shows an increase of about £80,000.

The prospectus appears elsewhere of the Mittagong Coal-mining Company, Limited, to be formed with a capital of £50,000, in shares of £1 each, to purchase and work coal deposits at Mittagong. It is proposed to have a board of directors in Melbourne as well as one in Sydney, the project having originated in a meeting at Melbourne. Applications for shares are to be made to Mr. J. H. Burn, the company's broker in Sydney.

In the Import markets, the usual first of the month orders are being executed, but there is a marked absence of speculation. The continuance of the tight money market and the superabundance of stocks are unfavourable conditions for anything beyond a steady trade; and except where a weak holder is forced to sell at lower than market rates, few large parcels are being placed. Fewer of this class of unremunerative transactions now come under notice than were reported on from three to six months back, from which it may be inferred that business, if less in amount, is being done on a sounder basis, and gives less cause for apprehension than the state of things existing before the recent failures. Respecting the flour trade, there is nothing fresh to report; the market is supplied from our own and nearly every other Australian colony, with still a small quantity of Californian of last year's production. Quotations are—New South Wales, £11 5s. to £12; South Australian, town brands, £12 10s. to £12 15s., country £11 15s.; Victorian, £10 12s. 6d. to £11 10s. Wheat is in demand at 5s. 2d. to 5s. 3d. Some further sales of tea have been carried through, including 200 boxes at 15s., 200 half-chests at 55s., and smaller lots; but the remark still holds good that the trade in new season's teas lacks the animation observable in previous years. This is due not merely to the fact that so many second houses have purchased on their own account as that they have been able to obtain old season's teas at sacrificial prices, which will not be accepted for the new. Buyers are not operating freely in the sugar market; and it is apparent that on the eve of the new crop expectations of a decline in value are formed. Some lines of colonial sugars have come to hand, best samples realising to £33, others from £25; white Queensland and Mauritius selling at £34 10s. to £35 10s. Epps' cocoa, 1s. 5d.; Taylor's, 1s. 3d. Coffee is in limited request; 10d. is the quotation for No. 1 Ceylon plantation; stock still considerable, but firmly held. 5½d. is the price of trade lines of Barry's chicory. Common grades of rice are worth £14 to £16; fine table sorts, £20; stocks of all descriptions being large. Sago and tapioca in plentiful supply, and quoted at 1½d., parcels having been placed at a lower price. Pepper: Black 9d., and white 1s. 1d. Dairymaid milk is still scarce and quoted to 8s., other brands from 6s. In dried fruits, sales of currants are made at from 4½d. to 5½d., according to quality, very little prime being in the market; elemes worth 6d. to 6½d., in other raisins there is very little doing; apples difficult to quote, stocks of prime getting reduced. Moir's marmalade, 6s. 6d. Imported candles are worth 9½d. to 9¾d., on the spot, according to brand, and at ½d. to ¼d. less to arrive: colonial 9¼d. Coarse salt 72s. 6d.; fine, 90s. to 95s.; rock, 65s. to 67s. 6d. In fish small sales of salmon making from 7s. 4½d. to 7s. 9d., the trade being far from active; sardines move off in ordinary lines at 4s. 3d. for quarters, and 9s. to 9s. 3d. for halves; fresh herrings worth 5s. 9d.; kippered herrings, 9s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.; red, 32s. to 33s.; for ling there is scarcely any inquiry, and quotations are almost nominal. Oilmen's stores generally are without change, stocks in nearly all lines being ample. Cigars for the time are plentiful, and prices rule in favour of buyers. In liquors, there is only a moderate trade business in bottled beers, although the demand for Bulldog for forward delivery is maintained; stout in moderate request at unchanged prices. Hennessy's brandy on the spot is selling at 30s. and 50s. for single and three-star respectively; and at 35s. 6d. and 48s. 6d. to arrive; second class brandy has been freely noticed, but in small lines chiefly, for the month's trade. Geneva quoted from 11s. 3d. to 12s. according to contents. Lowndes' rum, 4s.; Preston's, 3s. 9d. Burnett's Old Tom, 11s. 9d. Good trade business is noted in various brands of whisky. In metals there has been very little doing during the week. Galvanised iron of the various brands is selling at from £22 10s. to £24 15s. Fencing wire continues neglected, the nominal quotations being £12 15s., £13 5s., and £15, for Nos. 6, 8, and 10, respectively of the most favoured kind; wire nails are hardening somewhat, £15 is still quoted as value. Sheet lead may be quoted at £17 15s. to £17 17s. 6d., according to parcel. Jute goods are without change in value; woolpacks in trade lines moving at 2s. 6d., and cornsacks at 7s. 10½d. Cement continues in brisk request, stocks being scarcely equal to the somewhat extensive demand; 16s. 6d. to 18s. 6d. may be quoted as value of the different brands. On the wharfs this morning business was fair, and there was a good supply of produce offering. Quotations are:—Lucerne hay, £2 15s. to £3 10s. per ton; Circular Head potatoes, £3 15s. to £4; New Zealand, £3 15s.; Ballarat, £3 10s. to £3 12s. 6d.; Victorian oaten chaff, £5 to £5 5s.; ditto straw chaff, £3 15s. to £4; Melbourne onions, £3 7s. 6d. to £3 15s.; maize, 2s. 11d. per bushel; feed oats, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 8d.; seed oats, 2s. 6d.; butter, 1s. 9d. to 2s. per lb.; eggs, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d. per dozen; cheese, 6d. to 8d. per lb.; bacon, 8d. to 9½d.; ham, 9½d. to 10d.; lard, 6d. to 8d. At the Darling Harbour railway terminus there was a large quantity of produce forward, but the attendance of buyers was small. Prices are:—Oaten hay, in bales 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. per cwt., in bundles 4s. to 5s. 8d., in trusses 2s. 9d. to 3s. 3d.; wheaten and oaten hay, 2s. 9d.; straw, in bundles, 2s. 9d.; mixed chaff, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 9d.; straw ditto, 2s. 6d. to 3s. 3d.; pumpkins, 1s. 6d. per dozen.

Messrs. John Bridge, F. L. Barker, Brunker and Wolfe, Mort and Co., Limited, Harrison, Jones, and Devlin, Limited, and Hill, Clark, and Co. held their weekly sales of tallow and hides to-day. Except for very prime lots of tallow the market was scarcely so firm as last week. Prime beef may be quoted at £34 to £35 5s., and mutton £36 to £36 5s. Hides were in brisk request, and realised fully last week's rates; extra heavies worth 4d. to 4½d., other descriptions from 3d.

The Naples (s.) arrived to-day from Hongkong, with Eastern produce.

The Orient liner Liguria sailed this afternoon for London, via ports, with 1439 bales wool, 20 bales cotton, 11 bales basils, 70 bales sheepskins, 33,706 ingots 1612 cases copper, 5157 ingots tin, 473 bags regulus, 42 bags antimony ore, 137 pieces machinery, 125 casks tallow, 7086 cases meats, 85 cases glue, 52 packages oranges, 8 packages wine, 2 cases tortoiseshell, 8 cases books and charts, 4 packages specimens natural history, 3 packages jewellery, &c., and 36 packages sundries.

EXPLORATION OF NEW GUINEA.

(Extract from the Melbourne Age, June 15, 1883.)

. . . "In connection with the Waltham Watch Company it may be stated that when the proprietors of the Age desired to present Mr. G. E. Morrison (the explorer to New Guinea) with a reliable Chronometer, acting upon the advice of Mr. R. L. J. Ellery, the Government Astronomer, two Waltham Watches were, however, procured for Mr. Morrison instead. These were kept at the Melbourne Observatory for a fortnight, and thoroughly and carefully tested, and were pronounced by Mr. Ellery, at the end of that time, to be better suited for Mr. Morrison's requirements than any Chronometer."

Messrs. Elliott Brothers, Wholesale Druggists, Sydney.

Gentlemen,—Would you oblige me by sending me a case of St. Jacobs Oil for a friend of mine, who is a firm believer in this remedy. He uses it when troubled with rheumatism, and so do various members of his household for various complaints. I always keep a bottle in my own home, as it seems to be a useful household remedy, and, as I mentioned to you, it cured our storekeeper's wife, who was suffering from rheumatism.

Yours faithfully, WM. ED. WILSON.

THE RESULT WAS MOST GRATIFYING.

Sydney, N. S. Wales, July 14, 1883.

Dear Sirs,—The statements of a number of our citizens which are at present being given to the public through the medium of the Press respecting St. Jacobs Oil, suggests to me the propriety of adding my own experience for the benefit of all concerned.

I was recently induced to give this highly praised remedy a trial in severe and painful rheumatism with which my wife was troubled. I confess the result was most gratifying, not only in this case, but in several others among my friends which have come to my notice. The effect in every instance was such as to convince me that St. Jacobs Oil conquers pain, and is therefore fully worthy of the highest praise.

Very respectfully, E. A. LITTLE.

The Sydney Morning Herald.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1883.

Two writers have discussed in our columns the alternative of annexation or a protectorate as applied to Melanesia and New Guinea. Neither writer is a theorist, for each of them is a competent authority on the subject, in virtue of a close acquaintance with the islands. But while they agree as to the present condition of things, they differ somewhat in the policy they recommend, the one preferring what he calls a protectorate, the other what he calls annexation.

Both agree that it is not to the interest of the islanders that things should remain as they are, and that it is impossible to keep the South Sea islands detached from the growing traffic of Australia. In earlier days they were quiet and interesting seats of missionary enterprise, and trade scarcely touched them, or only lightly touched them. But the case is different now; the island products have become increasingly in demand, and, what is more to the purpose, the male labour has also come into demand. Part of this labour traffic has been legitimate and humane, and has been to the benefit of the islanders, but part of it has been a scandal and a danger. It is impossible, however, to go back and make the islands once more a missionary preserve; the intercourse cannot be stopped. It is the duty of practical men to face the inevitable, and to shape their policy in accordance with what they cannot control. Those who wish to avoid the trouble and the expense of governing the islands recommend that we should allow the natives to develop self-government for themselves. But those who know New Guinea and Melanesia best tell us that the materials for such self-government do not exist; that the subdivision of authority is intensely local, and there are as many governments as there are villages; and that self-government will be best developed under the control of a superior Power which should labour to bring it about.

The writer who recommends a protectorate does so under the assumption that, if occupying that position, Great Britain would be able to suppress inter-tribal wars, would promote a better understanding between the different villages, would stimulate the development of commerce and industry, and would gradually induce the islanders to seek a fuller exercise of the beneficent authority which had commended itself to them.

The writer who recommends annexation also advises as little disturbance as possible in the first instance of existing authorities, the recognition of local titles and local customs, and a general abstinence from the acquisition of land.

These recommendations approach each other so nearly that we are led to ask, what is the real difference between protection and annexation? How far does a protectorate go, and where does it stop? Is there any accepted, diplomatic definition of it? Whom does it protect, and in what way and to what extent, and can it be legitimately established without some sort of request? The fact seems to be that it is one of those vague terms, the meaning of which can be expanded or contracted to suit the convenience of protectors. What seems to be generally allowed is that a protectorate keeps at bay the flags of other nations. When the French undertook to protect Tahiti, it was an intimation given and accepted that no other country was to think of acquiring that island. And if we could hoist our flag over New Guinea simply to warn the rest of the world off, and avoid pursuing that policy further than from time to time became convenient, our immediate purposes would be answered. The question is, would the rest of the world respect this announcement?

There is no doubt that a protectorate would, so far as internal government is concerned, be sufficient for present purposes, if it protected natives against European aggression, and Europeans against native attack. The great trouble at present is that we have no jurisdiction in the islands, and this is a difficulty that the HIGH COMMISSIONER has never been able to get over—a difficulty that has rendered his office one-sided and impotent for half the work it was wanted to do. The naval officers have punished murderous assaults upon white men by the fiction of assuming that these assaults were acts of war—a fiction certainly not nearer to the real truth than the assumption that the natives desire our protection. If we adopt one fiction in the interest of the white man, we might adopt the other in the interest of the sable man. Certainly if a protectorate gave us a recognised right of jurisdiction, we should be able at once to prevent the natives from being kidnapped. No emigration from the islands would then be allowed, except under the supervision of a local authority, and we should have no more of that snapping up of men, women, and children which has led to so many fatal reprisals.

But if a protectorate makes us responsible up to a certain point, where does the responsibility stop? Granting that we protect the natives against other Powers, are we thereby under obligation to protect the subjects of other Powers against the natives? Travellers, explorers, and traders from all countries are likely to press into New Guinea if we hoist our flag there, and a protectorate might have some embarrassments if it involved a safe conduct for them all. It might, however, be possible to get over this difficulty by forbidding settlement or travel except under special permission, which permission might define the responsibility of the Government. It would not follow, if we establish a protectorate over New Guinea, that we open the field free for adventurers of all classes. So far from it, one of our first duties as a protecting Power would be to put trading with the natives and travelling through their country under stringent restrictions.

The interview yesterday between the COLONIAL SECRETARY and a deputation from the Sydney Hospital Board was in every respect important. Hospitals maintained almost wholly by public funds exist and are maintained in the interest of the public, and not in the interest of their managers or officials. It is the duty of the Government, therefore, to look upon them steadily from that point of view, and to keep that consideration present and paramount when laying down the lines of its policy in relation to those institutions. It is encouraging to see that the COLONIAL SECRETARY has done this. The terms of his reply to the deputation, when he expressed his inability "at the present moment" to comply with its request, were not absolutely conclusive. But his remarks disclosed the fact that he had made a careful study of the subject from the standpoint of the public interest, that he had drafted a general scheme of hospital management for the metropolitan district, and that in his view the proposals of the Sydney Hospital Board were out of harmony with that scheme, besides being intrinsically objectionable. Under these circumstances it is not difficult to forecast what the tenor of the final reply will be.

The deputation asked for a grant of £50,000 towards the erection of the new hospital in Macquarie-street. In reality the request meant a great deal more than that. The application was put in the most pointed way, so that there might be no mistake as to its drift and intention. The Government in granting it under such conditions would have placed itself in the hands of the Board, and (so far as any Government could do) would have committed the colony to the completion of an undertaking that bids fair to cost a quarter of a million sterling.

It was well to have a clear understanding upon that point, for that is of all things the one most wanted. If the directors could make sure of being able to draw £50,000 after £50,000 from the public Treasury at regular or irregular intervals for a series of years, their architectural ideas would have scope for development. Already we see that process in operation. It was at one time suggested that one part of the buildings—the laundry—should be of brick, but for the sake of uniformity stone was chosen. Then it was found that two stories would be required instead of one. Lastly, the original estimate of the cost of this structure was doubled. Given a vote of £50,000, to commit the Government to the completion of the undertaking, and who will say that a quarter of a million would cover the work, while the directors were about it? Under the Hospital Act, the Government has representatives on the Board. It is easy to see now that the presence of these gentlemen may be regarded not as a means of giving the Government effective control, but as committing and binding the Government. The ideas of the Board seem to change from time to time. The first intention was to complete the hospital at a cost of £200,000. Next it is said that the works now in hand could be carried out for £150,000. Then we are told that the directors will not go beyond £170,000. Another director names £240,000. It is interesting to witness this free and graceful handling of the tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands when we read that the Board began with £20,000 of its own, and an agreement on the part of the Government to grant £25,000. When Mr. STUART found himself in presence of such facts as these, and a request that £50,000 should be placed on the Estimates as a pledge that these gentlemen should have further assistance in like manner as it was wanted; his inability at the moment to comply with their request was not surprising. The wonder is that he had breath enough to give his reasons so fully.

It is quite time for the Government to brace itself up to the work of radical reform in our hospital policy. The system followed hitherto, under which the State finds the funds and a few private people provide the control, and the Government is urged, by pressure on the right hand and on the left, to hand over large sums of public money to the managers of institutions that are rather in rivalry than in co-operation with each other, so that the outlay cannot possibly yield to the public a benefit fairly proportionate to its amount, is essentially a bad one, and it ought to be brought to an end. It has grown up with the growth of the city; but, as a rank growth, it ought to be stopped. No Government would sit down and deliberately sketch out such a system now, if we were at the beginning of these matters. It is not yet too late to make a change, and introduce the element of intelligent and economical design. The hospitals, as we have said, exist for the public, and are built and supported with public funds. It is for the Government, therefore, as the guardian of public interests, to see that these institution are so classified, so placed, so built, and so managed as to secure the maximum of benefit to the public, with the minimum of inconvenience, disadvantage, and cost. These ends may be attained by timely measures of reform. They would not be promoted—they would rather be defeated — by the erection of a large general hospital in Macquarie-street, whilst another general hospital sufficient in design for the general hospital purposes of Sydney is in course of erection in a more suitable situation. If arrangements were not in progress, and far advanced, for supplying the wants of the metropolis in that respect, the proposals of the Sydney Hospital Board would still be open to the weightiest objections. It would be a fatal mistake to allow the heart of the city to be dominated by this vast pile of buildings, standing on an altogether inadequate area of ground, and rising tier above tier, in defiance of sound principles, to give the germs of disease expelled by the currents of ventilation the widest possible range. But the case looks worse in the light of a comprehensive scheme such as that suggested by Mr. STUART, with the foundations for its execution already laid. It may be said that £70,000 has already been spent. If that expenditure were to be left as an utter waste, it would be better to leave it so than to sanction the wasteful and injurious expenditure of a quarter of a million. But it need not be a waste, and the balance of £180,000 might, with forethought and a comprehensive plan of action, be spent elsewhere to the far greater advantage of the sick, with a permanent saving of public money, and with less risk to the people of Sydney.

At last a long vexed question has been settled—viz., who shall be Bishop of the Sydney diocese, and Primate of Australia? Canon BARRY is said to have accepted this post of arduous duty and high honour. If not the best man to be had, he is, taking him all round, an able man. He is on the shady side of life, but for that reason he should have the better experience; and that will be one of the first qualifications of a good bishop. His scholarship is good if not brilliant; and his attachment to his own Church is above suspicion, whilst he knows how to concede to others the liberty to think for themselves. The CANON is said to be a good preacher, a little dry at times, but always sterling. He should know how to organise the forces that will be at his disposal here, for he has been at the head of great institutions. And very soon his tact and strength will have to be put into play after his arrival. The Church over which he will preside is a large one, and it requires a good, well-balanced head. The new Bishop must be able to represent the interests of his Church, and to guide all its work with vigour. Probably few men would command more approval just now than Canon BARRY will. His selection may mark a new era in our Episcopal appointments. Hitherto, whilst good men have been sent out, they have not always been men of high titles and known fame. We have had men of title to reign over us, and now the Episcopacy is of sufficient importance to draw upon men of rank in the English Church. It will help to make known the possibilities of these lands, and our English friends need only to know us better to appreciate the colonies more than they have sometimes done. It has been an open secret that negotiations were being carried on with the Canon of WESTMINSTER, and not much has been gained by a nominal secrecy. It is said that Canon BARRY at first deemed himself to be too advanced in life to begin a career in a new world. There was some force in the objection; but a younger man might have carried less weight, if at first he had made more display. All is well that ends well, and it will be a matter for sincere congratulation to every true citizen that the protracted and difficult business of securing a Primate for the Anglican Church here is now well ended.

Mr. SERVICE is going too far in slamming the door of Victoria in the face of the suspected passengers by the Pathan. It is jumping at conclusions rapidly to assume that these passengers are what they are represented to be. They have not declared themselves, and they have not been identified. It is premature to subject them to penalty on mere rumour. But suppose they were the men that they are imagined to be, they are free men by the Imperial law, and they have as much right to live in Melbourne as in Dublin or London. Let us admit that they are every way detestable, that they are murderers in will and intent, and that they are cowards to boot. But we must remember that they have rendered a very great service to the cause of justice in the mother country. It is a painful necessity that in dealing with secret societies the Government is obliged to get men to play the part of informers. It is necessary sometimes to stoop to conquer. We must all rejoice that the secrets of so many Irish murders have been disclosed. The cause of order and good government, and of humanity, has gained thereby, and in getting that result we must put up with the drawbacks that have had to be encountered. As loyal colonists we have had to sympathise with the great difficulties the mother country has had to contend with in bringing great criminals to justice, and if our sympathy is not to consist of mere words, but is to take a practical form, we certainly ought not to throw difficulties in the way of the Government finding a place of exile for men who have to be sent somewhere. We are sorry that Australia should be selected either by or for such men as their home, as we do not want to be infected with disloyalty or a taste for assassination. But does the safety of the country really require that we should throw difficulties in the way of what the mother country has done? And if we are to stop these men, where are we to draw the line? Are they worse than the men who set them on, worse than seditious agitators generally? If we are to forbid every man who brings the material and the temper for disorder and the violation of law, we ought to have begun earlier.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE appeal of the Marquis de Rays, according to our cable news, has been rejected, and the trial is now proceeding. Count de Chambord, whose serious illness was reported some time ago, is now likely to recover. The French Senate, before the prorogation, has passed a bill, in a modified form, to regulate the transportation of convicts to the Pacific. O'Donnell, the murderer of James Carey, turns out to be an American citizen. Baron de Lesseps (says the Standard) is willing to agree to better terms with regard to the construction of a second Suez canal. Cholera is still rife in Egypt; 13 deaths have occurred since Tuesday, making a total of 35 for the week. In the House of Commons, Mr. Gladstone, in reply to a question, declined to give any definite assurance that the Government would consult with Parliament before withdrawing the British troops from Egypt.

A NOTICE in yesterday's Gazette states that Sir Patrick Alfred Jennings, K.C.M.G., has resigned his seat in the Executive Council.

A VERY large number of deputations waited upon Ministers yesterday. Reports of the proceedings will be found elsewhere.

IT is stated on what appears to be good authority that Mr. Joseph Coates, the well-known head master of Newington College, is to be appointed head master of the Sydney High School which is about to be opened by the Government.

MR. ALEX. OLIVER, Parliamentary draftsman, has prepared a "Manual of the Licensing Law," which has just been published. It comprises the Licensing Acts now in force in this colony, so arranged as to show the amendments effected by the Amending Act of 1883, together with notes of cases English and colonial. This exceedingly useful work will prove of great assistance to magistrates who are called upon to administer the law as it affects retail licensees, as well as to the publicans, whose duties and obligations are therein clearly and unmistakably set forth. Mr. Oliver deserves credit for the amount of painstaking labour he has bestowed upon the work, which has evidently been most carefully compiled. The design of the author has been to exhibit as far as possible in sequence the enactments of two very complicated and partially understood statutes, and save time and trouble to those immediately interested in the administration of the licensing law. Several important cases decided in the Supreme Court, bearing immediately on the Act, are noted, and a number of legal opinions as to the true construction or effect of the provisions of the Amending Act are given, together with a complete summary of the regulations in force with regard to the conduct of licensed houses and refreshment rooms coming under the Act. It is supplied with a copious index, which will greatly facilitate reference. The mode of taking the ratepayers vote on local option, which is not generally understood, is clearly explained, as are also several cognate matters immediately affecting the publicans' interest. At the present time such a useful work will prove of great value, and should be carefully studied by those whom the licensing law affects.

THE Court sitting in Banco yesterday, by a majority of one, refused to grant a rule nisi for a new trial in the case of Anderson v. Fairfax. The Court was composed of the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Faucett (who, dissenting from the judgment of the other two, thought there were sufficient grounds for granting the rule), and Mr. Justice Innes, who presided at the trial, and approved of the verdict. The chief question raised was one purely of law, whether the report that appeared in the S. M. Herald was of such a kind as, considering the circumstances, to have been made upon a privileged occasion. Upon the conclusion of the judgment his Honor the Chief Justice said: "The attention of the Court has been called to an article in the Echo of the 21st June in reference to the case of Anderson v. Fairfax, and to a series of articles in the Sydney Morning Herald of the 20th June last, headed "The Anderson libel case," containing attacks upon the Judge before whom the case was tried. I think these attacks are of such a character that they should be taken notice of. I need not say more than this now, but I direct the Prothonotary to take the necessary steps to bring the publishers of these papers before the Court on Monday week to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt."

IN the Banco Court yesterday, before the Chief Justice and Sir George Innes, a rule was refused to set aside a verdict of the District Court Judge at Orange, in the case of Gillespie v. M'Nab, which was applied for on the ground that the contract made by the plaintiff with the defendant, to deliver a certain amount of straw, had not been accepted. The Court made absolute a rule for prohibition against Mr. George Howell, the inspector of markets, on the ground that an information which had been laid against one Soutar, for obstructing the market place by bringing into it a load of empties, had not been laid by the officer duly authorised in that behalf by the municipal council. His Honor Mr. Justice Faucett, after having devoted the morning to the business of the Full Court, sat in Equity at half-past 1 and disposed of a number of formal matters. The suit of Smith and others v. Kearney and others then came up for further directions, the Master having merely reported as to facts connected with the residuary estate of the testator, Henry Linden, leaving it to the Court to decide the difficult points of law which he considered stood in the way of a ready allotment of interests to the parties entitled. The matter stands adjourned till next Friday.

WITH regret we have to announce the death of the Rev. Dr. Forrest, who was for many years rector of St. John's Roman Catholic College in connection with the University of Sydney. Dr. Forrest was about 68 years of age, having been born in Cork in 1820. He was educated for the church, partly at Maynooth, and partly at Rome, and after being admitted to the priesthood he did duty in Ireland for several years before coming to this colony. The genial disposition of Dr. Forrest had caused him to be warmly liked by very many people beyond his own communion, and his labours in the cause of Catholic education will long keep his memory green.

AT the meeting of the New South Wales Branch of the British Medical Association last night, a report in reference to the teaching of physiology and anatomy in the University and Public schools was adopted, and resolutions were agreed to approving a system of federal quarantine.

OUR Brisbane correspondent telegraphs as follows:—"With regard to the Herald's paragraph re French escapees the consul's statement is unwarranted. The Government here have done everything possible to promote their extradition, but while expressing the best intentions, the French tried to evade the duty of identification. The warders refused to take the escapees, and the captain of the corvette Bruat also refused, although it was sailing for Noumea from this port."

YESTERDAY the weather was bright and genial. Indeed the sun shone out so brilliantly that the temperature for a time was almost like that of a summer's day. A light breeze blew from the N.E. during the greater part of the day, but towards evening it showed signs as if it were going round to the southward again. The night was bright and clear.

THE Zoological Society's Gardens at Moore Park have been a great source of attraction since the arrival of the elephant at the grounds. At a meeting of the society held yesterday afternoon it was resolved to purchase a howdah for the animal.

AT a meeting of the electors of St. Leonards, held last evening, it was resolved to invite the Hon. G. Dibbs and Mr. B. O. Holtermann, members for the district, to a public banquet, to be held at North Shore on an early date; and that complimentary tickets be sent to the members of the Ministry. Messrs. Muston and Langley were appointed hon. secretaries. Alderman Jago, hon. treasurer, and an influential committee nominated to make the requisite arrangements.

MR. JAMES INGLIS delivered his popular lecture entitled "A Lay Sermon on an Auld Scotch Song," in the Glebe Presbyterian Church, on Wednesday. There was a large attendance. The Rev. Robert Collie presided, and introduced the lecturer. Mr. Inglis, taking for his text the old song, "Tak yer auld cloak about you," delivered a very enjoyable and instructive discourse, in which he impressed the lessons of kindness to the lower animals, thrift, and the faithful performance of duty. The lecture was enlivened by many well-told anecdotes of Scottish life. At the close, on the motion of the Rev. Principal Kinross, seconded by the Rev. A. Gardiner, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer and also to the chairman.

ON Wednesday evening, 1st August, the annual meeting of the Redfern Auxiliary to the London Missionary Society was held. Rev. G. Campbell took the chair, and Mr. Charles H. Slatyer read the financial statement, which showed that the total amount collected for mission during the year was £126 11s., of which £70 3s. 2d. had been collected in 57 missionary boxes. The Rev. George Brown then delivered an interesting lecture on "Pioneer Mission Work," relating his experiences during a 20 years' mission in the South Seas. After a hearty vote of thanks had been accorded to the lecturer, the meeting was closed by the chairman pronouncing the benediction.

THE monthly meeting of the Charity Organisation Society was held on Thursday, August 2. Present: Messrs. E. Foxbery (in the chair), F. C. Griffith, and the secretary, J. Sidney. After the usual finance business, the secretary reported that during the month of July 179 persons had applied for relief. This number was composed of 61 married couples, 65 widows, four deserted women, and 49 single men; four cases refused, known to be impostors. Seven special cases requiring further relief were brought under the notice of the committee, and the necessary assistance granted.

AT a meeting held at Nyngan on Tuesday last, to make provision for a water supply, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—1. "That this meeting expresses indignation at the action of the Government in not supplying the township with wholesome water for domestic use." 2. "That the Government be requested to take immediate steps to remedy the deficiency in the Nyngan water supply." 3. "That a petition be signed and forwarded to the Minister for Works by the chairman of the meeting—Mr. O'Grady."

HIS Honor Judge Dowling sat in the Metropolitan District Court yesterday, and disposed of a number of small claims.

THE charge against Ralph Riley of corruptly accepting a reward came on for hearing at the Quarter Sessions yesterday, when the accused was acquitted.

A CASE yesterday came before Mr. Dillon, S.M., in the Central Police Court, in which it was alleged the defendant had obtained from the complainant a certain sum of money by means of a false pretence, the false pretence being that he misrepresented the condition of and circumstances connected with a business into which he admitted the complainant as a partner on payment of certain money. The complainant stated that he had seen a notice outside an agent's office that a partnership in an auctioneer and broker's business could be purchased, and he visited the agent, and obtained through him an introduction to the principal. The defendant, it was alleged, misrepresented the condition of his business, and the complainant asserted that upon becoming a partner he discovered such to be the case. The accused was committed to take his trial at the next Court of Quarter Sessions.

WE understand that the unfortunate man Joseph Sylva, who, whilst following his occupation on the Circular Quay on Wednesday, 25th July, had both legs fearfully crushed, and was afterwards taken to the hospital, is progressing very favourably. It will be remembered that Sylva's legs were so severely mangled that it was found necessary to amputate them. A subscription list has been started for the benefit of Sylva, and we learn, amounts to about £150. At the District Court yesterday a successful suitor asked that the amount for which judgment had been given in his favour (about £8) should be handed over to the Sylva Benefit Fund, and Judge Dowling directed the registrar of the Court (Mr. J. A. Lucas) to pay the sum over as requested.

SOME commotion was occasioned last evening at the junction of the Glebe-road with Parramatta-road by an accident on the tram line. A Glebe Point tram on its way to Sydney ran off the rails here, and for a considerable time the traffic was blocked in consequence. The motor (No. 49) had to be raised by screwjacks in order to be replaced on the rails. The cause of the accident was said to be the metals becoming choked with stone. A large crowd collected on the spot, and a groundless rumour prevailed for a time that some serious disaster had happened.

A MAN named Thomas Kerins, aged 21 years, met with an accident yesterday at Alderson and Sons' Grange Factory, Bourke-street. He was engaged in putting a belt on one of the machines, and was standing on a shaft, when he fell, striking his right side against another shaft, and fracturing some of his ribs. He was taken to the hospital for treatment.

IN consequence of the favourable nature of the season and the absence of carrion (the Yass Courier remarks) the hawks have become a great nuisance in many parts of the district. Five shillings per head is paid by some farmers for all these birds destroyed in the neighbourhood where they reside. Mr. Merriman tells us that out of 32 of his stud lambs, which were kept in a paddock near his homestead, six were destroyed by the hawks; and he nearly lost a valuable ram, which he had occasion to tie up, through two of these pests attacking it, and would no doubt have soon finished their work had not Mr. Merriman discovered them and drove them off.

AN inquest was held at Ganmain on Tuesday (before Mr. L. A. Fosbery, J.P., coroner) on the body of an unfortunate man named Charles Daniel Parsons, who committed suicide on Sunday afternoon, at Ganmain, by drowning himself in a tank. It is reported that Parsons had recently inherited a large sum of money from a deceased relative in England, and in his excitement took to drink, with horrible effect. At the inquest, reported in the Wagga Advertiser, Thomas Jones deposed: Charles Daniel Parsons had been in my employment on and off for the last two years; on the 17th July the deceased left my employment for the purpose of going to Sydney; he stated that he had to call on a firm of solicitors there who had some important news for him from England; on Friday, the 27th July, the deceased returned to my place; he appeared to have been drinking heavily, but was then apparently quite sensible; on Friday night, about 11 o'clock, deceased woke me up; he said, "Come here, I want you;" I replied, "Go to bed, you have a touch of the horrors;" he looked wild; on Saturday morning I saw a light at my bedroom window; looked out, and saw deceased; he said, "Come out here, they are coming for me: they say I have killed you and Mrs. Jones;" I said, "Go to bed;" he then went away down to the stables; afterwards saw him kneeling down praying; he returned again in about half-an-hour; he appeared to be wandering in his mind; sometimes he appeared to be sensible, and at others he acted very strangely; last saw deceased alive on Sunday, about 10 o'clock; left him at this selection; he appeared right then; told William Henderson to have an eye to deceased, as he was a little wrong sometimes; then went away, and returned about half-past 4 in the afternoon; when I got near the place I saw Henderson; he called out to me to come on; went to the tank of water and assisted to take the body out; life was quite extinct." Another witness stated that he saw Parsons jump into the tank, and he appeared as if trying to drown himself; he was then on his back, and presently sank; the water was about six feet deep where he was; the body had been in the water about three-quarters of an hour.

THE death of the Very Rev. G. H. Connor, Dean of Windsor, seven months only after his preferment, has caused a wide and general feeling of regret in England. He was an especial favourite with the Queen, and during his short illness of two weeks bulletins of his condition were regularly forwarded to her Majesty five times a day by her orders, and on his death the Queen forwarded a beautiful floral wreath to be placed on his coffin, with her card bearing the following inscription:—"In token of affection and esteem for a dear friend, from Victoria." Her Majesty also caused the following touching record to be published in the Court Journal of May 12:—"The intelligence of the death of the Very Rev. G. H. Connor, Dean of Windsor, reached the Queen this morning. Though not unexpected, her Majesty received the news with much concern. The Queen had a high personal opinion of the Dean, who, as chaplain to her Majesty, and for many years Vicar of Newport, was known to the Queen and Royal Family, who sincerely mourn his loss." The late dean was a strict teetotaller, and ever took a warm and lively interest in the temperance movement, and especially in the C. E. T. S. His eloquent speech in Lambeth Palace, at its annual meeting a year ago, will long be remembered by all who heard it. The Church of England Chronicle pays the following deserved tribute to his memory:—"Only a few months ago—October, 1882—we were privileged to offer our congratulations to the revered and greatly beloved dean on his preferment to Windsor, and now, in common with troops of friends, from the Queen on her throne to the humble poor, who so long enjoyed his fatherly and affectionate counsels, we join in an unfeigned expression of sorrow over our common loss. His unaffected simplicity of character, gentle and amiable disposition, earnest and devoted zeal in good works, tender consideration for the feelings of others, and, above all, persistent and consistent witness to the faith once delivered to the saints, have made the world richer by his life, as it is poorer by his death."

MANY signs (observes St. James' Gazette) of the growing self-confidence of the Chinese Government and people have appeared lately; and now we have another in the Imperial edict ordering that the telegraph lines from Shanghai to Woosung and from Amoy to Hainan shall be laid by Chinese. It matters little to the foreign settlements who shall do this business; but the Emperor's decree is intended as a further concession to the growing party of exclusion. It is not as generally known as it ought to be that the traditional policy of Pekin is now only opposed to the persons, and not to the inventions of foreigners. The Emperor's father and uncles are in favour of the most rapid progress in all material matters, provided only that the control remains in their own hands; and as a proof of this, it may be stated that Prince Chun, or the Seventh Prince, the father of the Emperor, has a scheme in hand for the construction of a railway and for the working of a mine in connection with it. It is to be exclusively under Chinese management, and a gentleman named Shui is the Prince's representative in the matter.

ON the question of annexation in the Pacific, the Saturday Review of the 16th June observes:—"The Imperial Government should act with caution. It must bear the burden and responsibility, and must, therefore, have the uncontrolled power of deciding. It will also be necessary to have a distinct understanding as to who is to bear the burden till the new possessions can pay their way. We cannot allow that it is an open question whether the Imperial or the colonial Government is to decide as to what is to be done, and when and on what conditions. All these things must be settled in England. It would be cowardly and unwise to refuse the request of the Australians simply in order to avoid immediate trouble. But it would be a half-measure of a very fatal kind if the Australian colonies were allowed to act for themselves. What is done must be done by the Imperial Government on a full understanding of the circumstances, and done thoroughly."

THE death of the head of a very old firm of printers, Mr. William Clowes, is noticed in the Athenæum:—"For many years the name of Mr. William Clowes, whose decease occurred on the 19th ultimo, has been associated with literature as head of one of the largest printing establishments in this country. Mr. Clowes was the eldest son of William Clowes, who in 1803 laid the foundation of the business known as William Clowes and Sons, and he entered the office in 1823. His father was among the first to commence steam printing, and was called upon to defend an action for nuisance brought by his neighbour, the late Duke of Northumberland. This led to the business in Northumberland Court being removed to the present site, in Duke-street, Stamford-street, whence have emanated some of the most important works which the present century has produced. Specially may be mentioned the appearance of the Penny Magazine, which did so much for the cause of cheap, wholesome, and popular literature. The Penny Magazine, it is believed, was the earliest instance of the successful printing of woodcuts by the aid of steam machinery. Mr. Clowes, besides controlling the destinies of the business left by his father to himself and his brother, Mr. George Clowes, was ever conspicuous for the interest which he took in the welfare of the operatives in his craft. For thirty years he was a trustee and treasurer of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation. The building and subsequent endowment of the Printers' Almshouses at Wood Green greatly occupied his attention, and he always evinced a kindly zeal for the comfort of the inmates. Mr. Clowes was born on the 15th of May, 1807."

AN application was made to the Chief Justice of Victoria in chambers on Wednesday (says the Argus), as Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, for an order for further directions in a suit brought by several seamen on board the steamer Ferret to recover a sum due for wages to each of them. The Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court in this country had decided against the plaintiffs, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as no one of the sailors had established a claim against the ship for £50. The sailors appealed to the Privy Council, which held that as the sum claimed by all the plaintiffs amounted to £200 the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the claim. It was now asked that the registrar should proceed to tax the costs, and that an order for payment of the sum found to be due should be made against the owners of the steamer and the persons who had given bail on their behalf for the suit. Dr. Madden appeared on behalf of the defendants, and asked that any order to be made should be postponed pending the receipt of information from England. The steamer had been sold in Melbourne, and the proceeds had been sent to the owners, the Highland Railway Company, in Scotland, and it was asked that no order should be made against the persons who had given bail for the suit until an opportunity was given to obtain the amount from the owners of the steamer. It was also contended that costs should be allowed only as if there were one suit instead of several suits by the different sailors. His Honor held that only one set of costs should be allowed, but that he had no power to stop the enforcing of the decree for payment of the money against the different bondsmen, and he made an order accordingly.

A USEFUL novelty (says the Lyttelton Times) has been introduced this season at the Opawa establishment, having for its object the stocking of distant rivers with fish in a simple and efficient manner. The invention consists of a small flat box, made of galvanised iron netting, in which the eggs are packed with moss, from 500 to 1000 in each box. It is then ready for being dropped into a shingly part of a clear stream and covered over with a few inches of stones. The eggs can then hatch out in safety from their numerous enemies, the size of the mesh being such as to prevent the escape of the fish till most of the umbilical sac is absorbed, when they are comparatively safe. Strong healthy fish are at once naturalised to their new home without the expense and trouble of hatching-boxes, the risk of removing live fish, or the loss attending the liberating of weak, sickly ones. An opinion has been expressed by competent authorities that had a small portion of the numerous salmon ova consignements been put out in these wire boxes in suitable localities, the return of the mature fish to their nursery spawning grounds would have been an assured fact.

THE possibilities of the foreign trade of China are well shown in a recent report of the American Consul at Hongkong to the Department of State in Washington. This official says that if the total population of China consumed foreign cottons even only as freely as the fraction thereof now supplied through the treaty ports consume them, it would mean a consumption equal to double the present output of Great Britain, or over 7,000,000,000 yards. Both in China and Japan, however, there is a constant tendency to import cotton yarn rather than other cotton manufactures. The yarn is generally mixed with inferior native products, made up by native hand looms, and dyed in the manner most suitable for the domestic market.

THE irritation expressed by the French journalists at the English comments on their colonial enterprises is (says the Spectator), on the surface, a little absurd. They seem to think that when France is in movement, Englishmen should either be silent or approve, and detect in the most straightforward criticism a sinister intent. Of course, Englishmen will criticise, and as they are not much occupied with their own affairs just now, they will criticise closely, and close criticism of the French expeditions now on hand cannot be honestly made favourable. The English, for the moment at all events, are disposed to regard conquest as immoral, and if ever expeditions had conquest for object they are those despatched against Madagascar and Tonquin.

MR. BRIGHT (exclaims the New York Tribune) has earned many times over the magnificent demonstration of popular respect and affection accorded to him at Birmingham this week. During the last 25 years of his active private life he has not only worthily represented one of the most highly educated and progressive constituencies of the United Kingdom, but he has also rendered inestimable service to the country at large and to the general interests of civilisation and enlightenment. It must be a small and ignoble mind that can survey the career of this great and generous Englishman since his election for Durham in 1843 without feeling the inspiring influence of a noble example. May his life long be spared to England and the world as a familiar illustration of the essential nobility of human nature. As for Americans, they have known for a quarter of a century that he is the heartiest and most faithful friend they have had in England. He has often lectured them on what he has termed the barbarism of their economic legislation, but they have never resented his blunt sentences. He would be quickly forgiven harsher words than any he has ever spoken. He has never been sparing in his praise of American ideas and Republican tendencies; but whether he praises or blames, he is always loved and honoured in the country whose battle he fought almost single-handed in an hour of dire need. Americans never can forget that.

IT is well known (writes the London Standard) that Prince Bismarck gives nothing without an equivalent; and, though apparently he may have yielded much that figured in the May Laws without formally laying down any conditions for acceptance by those in whose interest the concession is made, he has certain conditions in view, and he expects them to be complied with. He is determined to win the battle in which he is engaged with the very politicians by whose aid the May Laws were passed, but who have now become more obnoxious to him than the Pope, the Curia, and Herr Windthorst. If Prince Bismarck is to succeed in breaking down the Parliamentary opposition offered him by the National Liberals and the Progressists, he must secure to himself by hook or by crook, the support of the Centre in the Prussian and German Parliaments. That is the whole secret of the mission of Herr von Schloetzer to Rome, of the long-suffering with which Prince Bismarck has borne the checks and disappointments that diplomatist has experienced in the Eternal City, and of the resolve of the Chancellor to do, without conditions, what he was willing to do with conditions, if the Curia could have been persuaded to accept them. It is not of priests and ecclesiastical education, of appointments to cures definitive or temporary, that Prince Bismarck is thinking. His eye is fixed on the Biennial Budget, and his will is bent on getting all those bills passed that have for their object the alleviation of the lot of the working classes with the help of the State, and the discarding of those laws of political economy to which Liberals in Germany still cling with unabated tenacity.

At St. Andrews' Cathedral there will be full choral service to-morrow afternoon. The "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" will be sung to Hubert Parry. The anthem will be "Praise the Lord," by Sir Geo. Elvey. The service will be intoned by the precentor.

His Honor the Acting Chief Justice of Queensland has been pleased to appoint Mr. Louis F. Dixon, of Eldon-chambers, Pitt-street, Sydney, solicitor, a Commissioner for Affidavits of the Supreme Court of Queensland.

Dr. Forrest had taken great interest in the lecture, and had stated his intention of being present. As Mr. Bromby leaves Sydney next week, he will have no opportunity of lecturing at Balmain.

THE VICTORIAN GOVERNMENT AND THE IRISH INFORMERS.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our own Correspondent.)

MELBOURNE, Friday.

On the arrival of the steamer Pathan this morning energetic steps were taken by the Government to prevent the Irish informers on board from landing. Mr. Kennedy, the officer in charge of the detectives who boarded the vessel, was called upon to exert himself to the utmost in the matter. Detective Mackay was entrusted with the carrying out of the most important part of the difficult task, and a staff of about four other police officers was told off to render assistance in case of need. Arrangements were made by Government for chartering the steamer Pharos to proceed down the bay to meet the Pathan. By the first train from Melbourne to Queenscliff Detectives Dowden, O'Donnell, and Smith proceeded for the purpose of keeping guard at the pier. They waited a considerable time, but eventually the Pharos hove in sight and steamed alongside the Pathan. The detectives had obtained the assistance of an Irish pawnbroker, at Sandridge, who said he knew Kavanagh in Dublin, and would be sure to recognise him. He had also some friends with him, who knew the informers, and who said they were anxious, as Irishmen, to point out the scoundrels, so that they might be prevented from landing in Victoria. A telegram was despatched to the officers at Queenscliff, directing them to detain the Pathan at the Heads, and stating that the city officials were coming down to her in the Pharos. The steamer, however, would not stop at the Heads when signalled to heave-to, and eluded the police boat which was sent out. The Pharos, however, got alongside, and the detectives immediately went aboard. All the passengers were, at the instance of Detective Mackay and the health officer, mustered on deck. The roll was then called, and each passenger had to answer his or her name. The Irishmen had all to state where they came from, where they were bound for, and what they intended to do. A passenger giving the name of Butler, supposed to be Hanlon, who said he was going to Sydney, was asked to stand aside. After this another passenger, giving the name of Kearnan, but who is supposed to be Joe Smith, received a similar intimation; and subsequently a young fellow, who said his name was Murphy, but who was believed to be Kavanagh, was also singled out. These men were told that they were suspected of being Kavanagh, Hanlon, and Joe Smith, which they denied. There was no doubt as to the identity of Kavanagh, who was already personally identified, and he was warned most strongly not to land. He said he was not Kavanagh, but he committed himself in other replies that he made to interrogations. An ex-constable on board on being asked if he had reason to believe that any of the Irish informers or Invincibles were on board, said he believed that there were two such characters amongst his fellow-passengers, and that they were Kavanagh and Smith. These suspected men will be kept under very strict surveillance during the time the steamer remains in port, and they will not be allowed to land if it can possibly be prevented. It is believed they will go on to Sydney.

At a meeting of the National Land League of Victoria to-day a unanimous vote of thanks was accorded to the Premier, Mr. Service, for his outspoken protest on behalf of the Irish colonists against the introduction into Victoria of the men implicated in the Phœnix Park murders.

THE EXPLORATION OF NEW GUINEA.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our own Correspondent.)

COOKTOWN, Friday.

The steamer Ellangowan, which arrived from New Guinea yesterday, brings intelligence that Mr. George Ernest Morrison, who has been despatched to explore New Guinea, has crossed the Lalokie River, and camped 80 miles from Port Moresby. At this place he formed a depot, but afterwards returned to Port Moresby for further supplies. His great trouble has been so far with the horses, which are almost wild. He has, however, made a fair start with his exploration, but he has been somewhat retarded in his movements by the weather, rain having fallen almost incessantly. Everything is reported to be quiet, and the natives friendly towards Mr. Morrison and his party.

TEMORA, Friday.

A crushing of over 400 tons of stone from Wright's quartz claim, Barmedman, yielded 326oz. of gold, or about three-quarters of an ounce to the ton.

A washing-up of 220 loads of stuff, from No. 2 Deutscher's, recently completed, yielded 218oz. of gold.

The South Australian quartz-crusher has just started work, after being idle for a fortnight undergoing repairs and alterations.

WATER BORING NEAR BOURKE.

The following telegram, which has been placed at our disposal, has been received by the Secretary for Mines from Mr. H. W. Ford, foreman of water augers, Bourke:—

"The water we struck at 61 feet, in bore B, gives a supply of 11 gallons an hour. We struck another supply at 69 feet of good fresh water, of 33 gallons an hour, rising to within 3 feet of the surface. This water carries a quantity of sand, which rises in the tubes, choking back the water. We have bored to 84 feet through rocks, clay, and sand, quite dry from 71 feet, and containing fossil bones. At 84 feet we touched a stone, or something very hard, which broke our only 5-inch auger off short at the bolt-holes. We have managed to catch the broken piece, but cannot get it any higher than the bottom of the tubes; nor can we get the rods disengaged from it. To recover the broken augers and rods we will have to raise the tubes. This will cause the bore to fill up to the bottom of the shaft, which will require boring out. This will be a quicker operation than making a new bore. The pipes are 43 feet below the shaft, and will require to be lifted that distance."

Great uneasiness is felt regarding the ship Northumberland, which left Melbourne on the 3rd March, and has not yet arrived at London. She has not been spoken recently by any vessel. The Northumberland was formerly a steamer, and was lately turned into a sailing vessel. She was in a foul state when she left here, and a slow passage was expected, but intense anxiety is now felt respecting her safety. She had a crew of 43, and took 20 passengers. She was last sighted three days after leaving Melbourne. She may have been delayed by head winds, or possibly may have encountered icebergs, which other vessels report having seen. Her agents do not yet fear any disaster having befallen her.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

ADELAIDE, Friday.

An action has been commenced by Mr. John Howard Angas against James Cowan, Sir William Morgan, and others, at the Civil Sittings of the Supreme Court. These defendants purchased from plaintiff the Willowie Station for £313,000, the stock to be taken at a valuation. The valuators valued the property, including water tanks and working stock, but the defendants repudiate payment for these, on the ground that they were fixtures and included in the price of the land. The difference made by this is nearly £13,000, which Mr. Angas claims. The point relied upon principally is that the valuator who assessed the property was appointed prior to the incorporation of the defendants as a company.

The Master of the Supreme Court has reduced Messrs. Mann and Thornton's bill of costs in the Sorata barge case from £400 to £237.

With reference to the application of the dredger hands to the Marine Board for the introduction of the eight-hours system, the board has resolved that they do not see their way clear to decrease the hours of labour, owing to the urgency of the work, but will be prepared to consider the application when the labour market hardens.

The proposal respecting the wharf for the accommodation of ocean steamers was again considered by the Marine Board. An amendment, that the Coalshed Wharf be let by public tender, was rejected by the casting vote of the chairman. Ultimately a motion was carried recommending the construction of a wharf giving 24 feet at low water at the Coalshed Reserve, to provide accommodation for large steamers, and partly for landing railway and other Government material.

A deputation waited on the Commissioner for Public Works this morning to urge on the Government the erection of a breakwater at Port Macdonnell. They stated that plans had been prepared, and that the first section of the work might be constructed for less than £12,000, which sum would secure the necessary depth of water inside. Mr. Ramsay promised to get a report on the work, and then he would take the matter into consideration. He said the reason the Government were making a railway from Mount Gambier to Rivoli Bay was because they considered Port Macdonnell a dangerous port without a breakwater.

A deputation from members of the Mercantile Marine Association waited on the Colonial Treasurer to-day, and asked him to favourably consider the formation of a naval brigade. Mr. Glyde said the Government were well disposed towards the proposal, if the cost did not exceed £1000 per annum. The intention of those interested is that the brigade should man a war-vessel in case of emergency arising.

A gardener employed in the Zoological Gardens, named Thomas Johnston, was to-day severely gored by an elk. His chest was lacerated, and one of his ribs fractured.

A peculiar fatal accident happened yesterday. A little boy, three and a-half years old, named Hockey, son of a labourer at Jamestown, suddenly ran towards his mother, and died. Mrs. Hampson, whose lectures here and in Melbourne have been so successful, was on Thursday last presented with an address and a purse of 50 sovereigns by the members of the Women's Prayer Union, which she had formed during her Adelaide mission. To-night another address was presented to her, which having suitably acknowledged, Mrs. Hampson bid a final farewell to the meeting.

CASE OF INFANTICIDE AT GRAFTON.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our own Correspondent.)

GRAFTON, Friday.

A coroner's inquest was held to-day on the body of a male infant which had been found in a closet on the premises of the Lion Hotel. After a long deliberation, the jury returned the following verdict:—"On or about Wednesday, the 1st day of August, at Grafton, Matilda Cook was delivered of a full-grown male child, born alive; and the said Matilda Cook killed the said child by strangulation, and then threw it down the water closet; and we find the said Matilda Cook guilty of killing the child." The coroner then committed the accused for trial for wilful murder. The girl, who is 19 years of age, denied at first that she had had a child, but after the body was found she admitted to some female friends that she had placed the body in the closet, as the child had been born dead. Medical evidence was given after the post-mortem examination which went to show that the child was healthy and full-grown, and was born alive; also, that death was the result of strangulation, caused by a piece of tape tied tightly round the infant's neck. The girl was examined, and gave evidence voluntarily, stating that the child fell off the bed after its birth, that it never cried or showed signs of life, or warmth; that she had made no preparation for it because it had been born a month before the full time. The affair has created a very painful feeling here, owing to the fact of the parents of the accused being old residents in the town, and a good deal of sympathy is felt for them under the circumstances.

THE QUEENSLAND ELECTIONS.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our own Correspondent.)

BRISBANE, Friday.

Mr. Morehead, the Postmaster-General, addressed a crowded meeting of electors at Fortitude Valley to-night. The meeting was very noisy, and for a long time there seemed to be a determined organised attempt to prevent him from speaking. Mr. Morehead eventually overcame the obstruction, and got a tolerably fair hearing. He said the Government could have retained their party intact if they had thrown the Kimber transcontinental railway agreement over. But they had felt bound to submit it to the country, as it was made under an Act of Parliament, and they did so well knowing they would be defeated on it in the House. He maintained it was impossible to construct coast lines except by loan. For railways to the interior they must adopt some other system. He upheld the system of land grants as the proper way to construct such lines. He denounced the guarantee system recommended by Mr. Griffith as most dangerous to the interests of the community. He asserted that Mr. Griffith, when he said he was able to get railways made by the guarantee system, had referred to a proposal from Audley Coote, the father of the Tasmanian guarantee railway system. As to the fiasco with regard to coloured labour he said he would not consent to the introduction of coolies unless it was possible to keep them on plantations. Rather than allow them to mix with the white population, he would let the sugar industry go; but he was certain they could prevent it by punishing not the coolies but the whites who employed them in other than tropical agriculture. He denounced the plan approved by Mr. Griffith for importing the white labourers on long agreements at 15s. per week to work the plantations, as unfair to proposed immigrants and to all working men in the colony. He claimed that the mail steamers had benefited everyone, especially the small traders, who were now able to import. Whatever its defects, it was the cheapest long sea route in the world, carrying letters for 4d., and half the letters from Brisbane went by that route. He concluded by a denunciation of Mr. Griffith, and asserted that the electorate degraded itself by returning a nonentity like Beattie. A vote of confidence was proposed amidst much disorder, and was carried by a considerable majority.

The Hon. Patrick Perkins, Minister for Lands, addressed a meeting of the electors of Aubigny, at Westbrook head station, on the Darling Downs, this afternoon.

Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith addresses his constituents at Bundaberg on Tuesday next.

Mr. Archer, Colonial Treasurer, addressed a meeting of electors of Blackall at Rockhampton last night. He was well received, and a vote of confidence passed. He said the Government had been defeated on the transcontinental railway, and were not prepared to resuscitate it at present, though they might do so at a future time.

Mr. King, Speaker of the Assembly, addressed the electors of Maryborough yesterday. A vote of confidence was passed without opposition, but there was a very small show of hands. He declined to say at present whether he would support the Government or not.

Mr. S. Griffith announces on behalf of Mr. J. R. Dickson, who is absent in England, that the latter is a candidate for Enoggera.

TEMORA, Friday.

It is stated that the lessees of the Temora run have made application to purchase 38 blocks of land adjoining Temora, under the improvement clause. They are fencing in the land close to the north boundary of the town, including a portion of the alluvial workings and some of the miners' dams. The progress committee have written to the members for the district, requesting that the matter be brought before the Minister, as, if the purchases be permitted, the area now open to selection will be rendered useless for agricultural settlement.

The weather is fine.

Yesterday an inquest was held at Barmedman by the coroner for the district, touching the late fire at M'Carthy's Hotel. A thorough investigation into the circumstances took place, which lasted till 9 o'clock p.m. The finding of the jury was to the effect that there was no evidence to show how the fire originated.

The road between this town and top of Mount Keira, which is only three miles away, is badly in need of repairs for traffic, the £7 per mile now guaranteed by the Government for its maintenance being wholly inadequate for the purpose.

The new Public school in Smith-street is being proceeded with. The walls are nearly finished.

The new grand stand on the racecourse is to cost £506, and to be complete for the first race meeting in October.

The steamer Aidinga, owned by the Mount Kembla Coal Company, now trades regularly to Port Kembla for coal.

WAGGA, Friday.

A letter was received this morning from Mr. G. C. Loughnan, M.L.A., stating that the Premier had accepted the invitation to visit this town, and would arrive on the 29th instant.

POONCARIE, Friday.

The steamer Mundoo while proceeding up the Darling got snagged in one of the Pooncarie Bends. The boat filled, and was run on a sandspit. Through good help being at hand, not much damage was done to the cargo. The river in the neighbourhood of Pooncarie is in a bad state with snags.

The weather is dry, but threatening for rain, much of which is wanted.

ANNEXATION OR PROTECTORATE.

There seems to be now a very general consensus of opinion that, in view of possible, if not probable, contingencies and dangers, our relationship to New Guinea and to the large outlying Western Pacific groups must in some way or other assume another character, and that some action should at once be taken. A large proportion of the people regard the federation of the colonies as an event not only very desirable in the best interest of all, but also as one which sooner or later is certain to be accomplished.

It is generally agreed also that the possession of New Guinea, or of any of those outlying Western Pacific groups, by any foreign Power is neither safe nor desirable, especially if they are to be used as penal settlements, and this will apply whether federation be accomplished or not.

But in any case it is quite certain that our present relationship to those groups cannot long remain as it is. Some change will be absolutely required, as much in the interests of the natives themselves as in that of the whites who trade there. It is an undoubted fact that there are many evils connected with the labour trade, for instance, which existing regulations have not prevented, and which, as some of us believe, they are utterly unable to prevent; and it is quite certain that the present attempt to govern the whites who engage in the traffic, or who trade with the natives, by a High Commissioner, who may reside in Fiji, England, or Ceylon, is not, and cannot be, a success.

The two plans open for discussion in considering the best way of dealing with these islands are that of annexation and that of establishing a protectorate over them.

A communication from one intimately acquainted with Melanesia, and deeply interested in its welfare, has lately appeared in this journal, in which the writer's opinions on the subject of annexation or a protectorate are fairly and decidedly expressed in favour of a protectorate.

This may or may not be the best mode of dealing with the islands; but I do not at present deal with the conclusion arrived at, as I wish to show before doing so that all the reasons which the writer adduces against annexation apply with equal force against a protectorate. In order to make this matter plain to all, I shall have to recapitulate some items of information as to the present state of those Western groups, fuller details of which I have given in previous articles on the subject.

I do this with the greatest confidence, as I feel that the statements made in those articles as to the political organisation and social condition of the people are confirmed by the writer whose views I am now considering.

Anyone who wishes to have a correct idea of the actual state of the Western Pacific islanders of to-day, so necessary to enable him to form a correct opinion on the question, must at once abandon all ideas formed from any knowledge he may have of Eastern Polynesian groups and peoples. The large groups of New Hebrides, Solomon, and New Britain, as well as New Guinea, present many important differences in political organisation and social customs from those, say, of Tonga or New Zealand, or any other pure Polynesian people.

In dealing with a Polynesian people like the Tongan or Maori, as in dealing with natives in Kaffirland, Zululand, Ashantee, and elsewhere, we can generally deal with well-known and powerful chiefs, or a number of such, whose authority is acknowledged by the people, and whose acts are binding on them. We treat in such cases also with men speaking a language which is understood or spoken by the great bulk of the people. We deal also with a people able and ready to combine against a common enemy, and capable of a more or less effectual combined action, and in making a treaty or establishing a protectorate we are associated with men who are able to give or to obtain the opinion and wishes of their people on the matters submitted to them.

But none of these things is possible in dealing with these Papuan Islanders, and this fact must never be forgotten in the consideration of this question.

There are no powerful chiefs as there were in Fiji; the different islands in the same group have generally little or no connection with each other; the language of a people on one island is utterly unintelligible in very many instances to the people on another island only a few miles away and in the same group; nay, more, it very frequently happens that a number of small districts on the same island speak very different dialects, and have no connection whatever with each other.

These people are always jealous of each other, and nearly always at war, and, in fact, there is no one single bond of union, or ground of common interest to which we can appeal. How, then, can a protectorate be established over such a people, and at the same time avoid the evils which the writer of the article I am discussing alleges against annexation?

The writer, for instance, asks, "Is annexation to be a mere arbitrary proceeding on our part—a deferred conquest, in fact—or is it to be with the consent of the natives themselves? If the former, I cannot bring myself to think it either right or just. If the latter, how is such consent to be obtained?" Just so; and how, I ask, is the consent of such a people to be obtained to a protectorate? The very same difficulty exists with the one as with the other, and the same arguments may be used against a protectorate as against an annexation. If the one means a "deferred conquest," it will be very hard to prove to a Papuan savage that the other does not mean the same. If annexation is "a mere arbitrary proceeding" on our part, I feel very certain that a protectorate—especially if unasked and unsought for—will appear precisely the same to a Solomon islander.

Again, "if annexation means ruling," the writer does "not see how this rule is to be enforced;" but a protectorate must also mean ruling, or it is not a protectorate at all, and the same difficulty applies with equal force to one as to the other. Some of us who know these islands well do not expect that any organised and powerful opposition could be found in any of the groups against either annexation or a protectorate, and believe also that the difficulties experienced to-day in protecting the interests of the natives or the white traders would all be materially lessened by the annexation of the groups, or the establishment of a protectorate. The writer again says:—"But I return to my former point, viz., that annexation means ruling, and that the country which annexes becomes responsible for the people annexed;" and he asks, "Is England or are her colonies prepared to accept such a responsibility?" My reply is that we have already assumed a responsibility with regard to those peoples which makes annexation or a protectorate absolutely necessary for the safety and well-being of the people themselves. We are responsible for the injuries inflicted upon those islanders by the labour trade which we have legalised and sanctioned, and for the gross assumption of power over the right of chiefs and people which our authorised agents assume and claim, and it is these very facts which, in the opinion of the writer of the article in question I venture to say, and of myself, as well also as of all those who know the islands, and have the interests of the people and the honour of England at heart, will compel us to annex or in some way govern the different groups. With the writer, I am of opinion that unless some action be taken serious troubles will arise; and now I think it best, in order to make all clear, that I define what I mean when I advocate annexation. Perhaps it will appear that my annexation is very much the same as the writer's protectorate.

My idea of annexation is as follows:—1. That we should take formal possession of all those Western Pacific groups not yet annexed by any other Power, and not excluded from annexation by any treaty or agreement made between England and any other European Power. I would advocate that these groups be taken possession of at once by the establishment of a few stations in the different groups, at which a deputy commissioner should reside.

2. That there should be no unnecessary interference with the government of the chiefs, or with the manner and custom of the people, and no attempt whatever made to force upon the people a state of civilisation for which they are not prepared.

3. That no "labour vessel," if the trade be still sanctioned, should be allowed to leave the group without being properly "cleared" by the resident deputy commissioner, who should be held strictly responsible for the due observance of all rules and regulations made for the protection of the islanders.

4. That the natives should be protected not only in the possession of their lands, but also prevented from selling them, at all events for some years. The ideas which natives have of land-selling are not the same as our own, and it will be by far the safest plan to forbid all traffic in land by Europeans, except perhaps by leasing for limited periods.

5. That these deputy commissioners should reside permanently in the different groups, say two in the Solomons, one in New Britain, and two for the present on New Guinea, and be provided with competent interpreters. That they should be considered as the representatives of England, and should be regularly visited by the ships of war and the gunboats of the station, but that in all matters in which British interests are not immediately and directly imperilled they should seek to govern by influencing and guiding the native chiefs, and as far as possible should allow them to rule and govern their own district in their own way.

6. That these governance of the groups, in the manner stated above, should be under the direction of a High Commissioner, directly responsible to the Imperial Government, and that this High Commissioner should reside in Sydney, and be instructed to visit the different groups at least once each year, and that in no case should he be the Governor of any other colony.

7. That the expenses of this system, which need not, I think, be very great, should be borne by the different colonies and the Imperial Government in such proportions as may be decided upon.

I advocate annexation because I do not think it possible to get the consent of such a people as the Papuans of the Western Pacific are at present to a protectorate, nor even to make them understand what it means. I advocate it also because I fear that a protectorate would probably involve us in native quarrels, and would excite the jealousies of different districts with each other. Suppose, for instance, that we were to get the consent of one district or a number of them on one island, or of one island amongst a number of such in the group, to such a scheme, we are not at all certain that the others would join them. The probability is that their old jealousies would prevent them from doing so. But we should now be responsible for the safety of the people of the contracting districts or islands, and of course we should have to defend them against their enemies and fight for them if necessary. I scarcely think we are prepared for this. I advocate this also in the interests principally of the natives themselves, because it is impossible to leave them as they are. Every year "labour" is getting scarcer, and past experience assures us that as the difficulty of getting the labour increases so do the abuses of the trade multiply.

Whether we wish it or not, it it, I think, absolutely certain that we shall have to assume the government of those groups for the preservation of our own honour and fair fame, as well as for the protection of the people, who will otherwise soon experience the fate of all savage tribes brought into contact and conflict with a superior race, especially if the stronger power and violent passions of the superior race are uncontrolled by the restraints and laws of a Christian Government.

A "protectorate" is a much nicer sounding word than "annexation;" but, so far as the Western Pacific natives are concerned, it would I am sure be found to be utterly impracticable to establish anything worthy of the name, and that if it were accomplished it must end sooner or later in annexation, and would in fact be so regarded by the natives from the beginning. I believe that many difficulties and much future trouble will be avoided by simply annexing all the groups at once, but at the same time leaving them as much as possible to develop naturally and quietly a higher civilisation in their own way by our help.

CARPE DIEM.

CHINESE GARDENERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I notice in your police report of this morning that six Chinese gardeners pleaded guilty to the heinous charge of having on Sunday, the 15th of July, actually ventured, in this most Christian country of New South Wales, to hoe up their gardens, for which stupendous crime they each had to pay the sum of 3s. 6d.

We are supposed to be striving our utmost to put down larrikinism, and it seems to me, if Inspector Waters attended to that part of his duty, he would be doing much better work, and serving his country far more judiciously, than hunting up for punishment poor Chinese gardeners, who are peacefully working in their little plots of ground in order to sell the produce of such industry at a cheaper rate, and with proverbial civility, to the very people who never lose an opportunity of working them an injury should the smallest chance of doing so present itself.

I am not championing the Chinese, but I raise my voice against injustice. If these men are brought to account for simply tending their gardens on the Sabbath, which should be borne in mind is no Sabbath to them, why should those who have servants and wealth go unpunished?

Why, Sir, I live in one of the most aristocratic suburbs of Sydney. My neighbours all round me attend church and their children Sunday schools, and are considered strictly orthodox, and yet it is no unusual thing to see one gentleman making good use of his lawn mower, and another raking his garden on the Sunday morning, and I plead guilty myself to doing anything in my own garden which I choose to do. I should feel greatly astonished if the sergeant of the district thought it his duty to trot me off to a police court for so doing; yet of course, armed with this 29th Charles II. No. 7, he would have the law on his side, and it would be as equally just to deal so with me, or such as me, and much more reasonable than with these who do not acknowledge our Sabbath as theirs, though they keep it far more quietly than nine-tenths of the so-called Christian community, albeit they may not even have been of that mighty potentate Charles II. or dream they are committing any offence.

Such labour as these six Chinese were engaged in seems to have been most necessary. Vegetables and fruit will not thrive without much patient industry, and as it is to be believed that during the six days when people are nothing loth to purchase of these men, because they get them both better and cheaper, they are unable to do much in the way of cultivation, so assuredly it is an act of necessity for them to set their gardens in order for the coming week, as much as for a baker to bake his bread, or a brickmaker to attend to his kiln and his furnaces. Apologising for the length of this letter, I am, &c.,

THE MACLEAY RIVER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Referring to that portion of the telegram from Kempsey, published in your Country News of to-day, wherein your correspondent alludes to the quantity of maize now lying on the river awaiting shipment, permit me, on behalf of the company I represent, to point out that the fact of such an accumulation of cargo is entirely due to the present shallow and dangerous state of the Macleay River bar.

The steamers employed by us in the Macleay trade are capable of bringing away from the river over 10,000 sacks of maize per week (when there is 8 feet 6 inches of water on the bar at high water), but owing to the very tortuous and shallow state of the channel over the bar during the past six months, we have not only been frequently delayed for days at the entrance by bad weather, but have further been prevented bringing out full cargoes, it being unsafe to load past 7 feet 6 inches, or 7 feet 9 inches, and even at this draught our steamers have in many instances to employ a tug boat to assist them in getting out safely.

As an instance of these delays, and the consequent loss entailed on us, I enclose two telegrams received from our manager at the Macleay, by which you will see how we were compelled to submit to such loss no later than last week. In this case the Platypus had been waiting off the bar from the 21st till the 28th July, waiting a chance to enter, and the Tomki (specially designed and built for shallow bars) was unable to bring out more than one-third of a load.

Trusting you will do us the favour of inserting these few lines, I remain, &c.,

JOHN WHITE, Manager.
Clarence and Richmond Rivers Steam Navigation Company, Sydney, August 3, 1883.

"Kempsey, July 26. South channel at bar so tortuous that Queen and Platypus came in north channel; expect both cross out to-morrow. Tomki will only take about one-third load."

An Extraordinary Story.—A very extraordinary story is reported from Pesth. Six youths, sons for the most part of respectable shopkeepers, recently formed a kind of club, and arranged among themselves to put their spare money into a general fund and to spend it from time to time in social enjoyment together. Ere many weeks elapsed, however, not only the spare cash, but also every kreutzer these young fellows possessed in the world, vanished in mild dissipation; and the members of the club strangely determined that, as they were utterly penniless, they would all commit suicide. With this object in view they adjourned to a wood not far from the city, taking with them a six-chambered revolver, which was to be the common instrument of death. A boy of 17 was the first to put the decision into practice. He deliberately fired one ball into his neck and a second into his breast, and then fell. Thereupon four of the survivors lost heart and fled; but the fifth, not deterred by the sight of the bleeding body of his friend, picked up the pistol and discharged it in the direction of his heart. One of the foolish youngsters was fatally wounded; but the other, it is expected, will recover, and, it may be hoped, will join no more suicide clubs.

The PROGRESS of MODERN ARTILLERY.

VIII.

We have now glanced at the utility of rifling a gun (or cutting spiral grooves in the bore), as also at some of the principles upon which such rifling depends, and its influence upon the proportional length of the ordnance. That which is termed the "pitch" of rifling is the angle at which the grooving of the barrel is formed. This, and the number of grooves, which is termed the pattern of rifling, depend upon the fancy or system of the inventor. Rifling a gun is performed through the agency of a machine, constructed in such a manner as to combine rotation of motion as well as that of progression; by means of which, and regulating the ratio of the rotation to the progression, a spiral of any required pitch can be obtained. The classes in general adoption may be enumerated as four, viz.:—(1.) Muzzle or B.L. guns, having projectiles of hard metal fitting the peculiar form of the box mechanically. The Whitworth and Lancaster guns, the former of which has a hexagonal bore and projectile, and the latter bore and projectile in the form of a twisted ellipse, are types of this class. (2.) M. guns, with projectiles having soft metal studs or ribs to fit the grooves, or copper gas checks fitted to the base of the projectiles, as in the French and Woolwich systems. (3.) B.L. guns, with projectiles having a soft metal envelope or cup which is expanded by the gas in the bore. (4.) B.L. guns, with projectiles having a soft metal envelope or coating larger in diameter than the bore, but which is compressed by the gas into the form of the bore, as in the Armstrong and Prussian manufacture.

It became evident that, to meet the requirements of the new system an improved construction must be adopted, providing for the requisite increase in the length of bore, diminution of calibre, and additional strain rendered inevitable by the action of the projectile in forcing its way through the grooves or rifling, and acquiring the rotatory motion already described. The simple cored cylindrical form of S.B. ordnance was no longer sufficiently powerful to withstand the increased tension. Moreover, it became requisite to employ a different metal or metallic combination, as those previously in vogue for S.B. ordnance, viz., cast iron and bronze, were both objectionable. The latter had been chiefly used for field-guns; but upon being rifled such guns were found to score and erode, and to be generally weakened from the effect of the rifling, due to want of homogeneity in the metal. Cast iron, formerly used for S.B. heavy guns, was much too weak to withstand the increased strain, and could not be worked with the hammer. Wrought iron, however, was found to combine the requisite ductility, tensile strength, facility of working, and high capability of being welded. It was also ascertained that steel, possessing the qualities of hardness, homogeneity, high elasticity, and great tenacity, was an excellent material for the inner barrel of the gun; but that, from its little margin between the limits of elasticity and rupture, it was liable to fly to pieces suddenly, and was therefore unsuitable for use alone. Our present ordnance is manufactured from mild steel toughened in oil for the inner barrel, and good ductile wrought iron for the remaining portions—experience having shown the necessity of discarding the latter material in favour of the former for the inner barrel or tube.

Between the years 1857 and 1859 a series of experiments was made by the two famous constructors, Whitworth and Armstrong. Sir Joseph Whitworth did not, however, at that time propose any gun of his own construction, and had only rifled Government blocks of bronze and cast iron, while the Armstrong B.L. screw gun was complete in every respect. In the original construction, this gun was built up of a number of thin coils, with a solid forged breech-piece; and Sir William Armstrong is undoubtedly entitled to the credit of being the inventor of the coil system. His gun consists chiefly of the barrel, the breech-piece, the trunnion ring, and the coils. The latter are made by winding a hot bar of iron round a mandril, or tapered iron roller, which is afterwards removed. The rough coil so formed is then welded, bored, and turned to the required size, and a succession of wrought-iron coils is shrunk on to the inner tube or barrel of steel. The system of rifling is the polygroove, consisting of a number of small grooves cut into the barrel. The Service 40-pounder (of which there are several in the colony) contains 56 grooves, with a spiral twist of one turn in 36·5 calibres.

The Ordnance Select Committee finally decided in favour of this description of gun. In January, 1859, a contract was entered into with the Elswick Ordnance Company, and the manufacture of the Armstrong B.L. guns was also commenced in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. In February, 1859, Sir W. Armstrong was appointed Engineer of Rifled Ordnance, and in the following November he also became Superintendent Royal Gun Factories. Both field artillery and siege and garrison batteries, besides the Royal navy, were soon equipped with these guns.

Within a few years, however, it became a question whether a less costly and complicated method might not be adopted with advantage. The B.L. system is wanting in simplicity, it requires a great many implements for its repair; and experience soon showed that there was a liability to serious accident from various causes, such as the breech-screw being improperly screwed up, the vent-piece being weak or ill-fitting, &c. In 1863 Sir Joseph Whitworth, having carried on a series of private experiments, and perfected his system, obtained such great results that he demanded another trial; and a special committee was appointed in June of that year to examine and report upon the different descriptions of guns and ammunition proposed by the two great rival constructors. An interesting series of experiments followed, at an expense of £35,000, with B.L. and M.L. guns of various patterns. In August, 1865, after about 3000 rounds had been fired from each gun, the committee reported, upon the whole, most in favour of the Armstrong M.L. ordnance. Further experiments were carried on in 1866, 1868, and 1870, with a view of testing the relative merits of M.L. and B.L. systems for field guns. The committee in 1870 unhesitatingly reported in favour of the M.L. system, on the grounds of simplicity, facility of repair, ease of working, rapidity of fire, original cost, and cost of maintenance; all of which were declared to be in favour of the M.L. gun. In consequence of these recommendations no new rifled B.L. field-pieces have been made since 1864, but in 1871 the manufacture was commenced of R.M.L. steel and iron field-guns; built up of an inner barrel of steel and a jacket of coiled iron carrying the trunnions. This is the description of gun with which our own colonial field batteries are armed.

The principal advantages claimed for B.L. guns are—(1), reduced size of embrasure; (2), less exposure of men; (3), greater rapidity of fire; (4), increased length of barrel; (5), greater power of gun; (6), superior durability; (7), facilities for examining the bore. But as against these it was demonstrated—(1), that this only applies to heavy guns, and where embrasures are used—now hardly at all; (2), that with field and siege guns, M.L. and B.L. are about on a par; (3), that as to facility of loading and rapidity of fire, frequent experiments with field, siege and heavy pieces have shown that, if any, M.L. guns have the advantage here; (4), that with field pieces M.L. guns may claim the superiority, inasmuch as a certain extra length is required in a B.L. gun for a B.L. apparatus; (5), that as regards power and accuracy of fire, experiments made render it dubious at least, which system has the advantage; (6), that this cannot be held to apply to field or siege guns, and that although with heavy guns there was formerly an erosion of the bore, arising from windage, and the rush of heated gas between the projectile and the bore, yet by means of expanding wads or gas checks, this defect has been almost entirely removed; and (7), that examining the bore of a steel-lined gun is so simple an operation, that little advantage can be claimed for the B.L. gun in this respect. Further than this, B.L. is attended with the following disadvantages:—The construction is more complicated than that of an M.L. piece, and skilled labour is required to keep it serviceable; both gun and ammunition are more costly; if the gun be of large calibre, the B.L. apparatus when sufficiently strong and heavy will be unwieldy; that with the same weight of metal the B.L. is a weaker and less enduring construction than the M.L., and that if soft projectiles larger than the bore be used the strain is much increased, and, from the absence of windage, a more complicated and dangerous fuse is necessary. On the other hand, the M.L. has a simpler, less costly, and stronger construction, which requires no peculiar care to keep it in order; the ammunition is less costly, and a simple fuse without percussion arrangement can be used.

The original or Armstrong construction was (as we have seen) that upon which all R.B.L., and also the earliest of the R.M.L. ordnance were made; but although good results were given, there were yet certain disadvantages. The construction was expensive, both from the quality of the iron required and the number of pieces to be put together. The large forging for the breech piece was especially very costly, and the outer coils were liable to split in consequence of the difficulty in calculating the respective proportionate amount of tension. A simpler and less expensive fabrication was therefore much desired, and in 1865 Mr. Fraser, the deputy assistant superintendent of R.G.F. proposed his important modification of the Armstrong system. It differs from that construction chiefly in building up a gun with a few single or double coils, made with bars of larger section, instead of several finely finished single coils, in welding the trunnion ring to the other coils, and also in doing away with the expensive forged breech piece. All natures of heavy M.L.R. guns upon this system are made in the same way, but the higher classes have a "belt" in addition to the coils; and in the 80-ton there is an additional coil. It is upon this construction that the 18-ton and 12-ton M.L.R. guns mounted at our fortifications are made. As an instance of the rapidity and accuracy of fire with these guns, it may be mentioned that in 1875 seven detachments of garrison artillery competed at Shoeburyness with the 10-inch 18-ton guns similar to our own. They fired 35 rounds with the following results:—Direct hits, 7; ricochet, 6; total hits per round, 0·37; mean error in range, 30 yards; mean time per round, loading only, 1 minute 17 seconds; loading, laying, and firing, 1 minute 45 seconds. The targets were 9 feet x 9 feet, at ranges of 1200 and 1600 yards alternately. The day was unfavourable, there being a strong variable wind across the range, while a heavy rain-storm just before the practice rendered everything wet and slippery. Notwithstanding these disadvantages one shot out of every three hit a small target, at distances of about one mile and three-quarters of a mile respectively. The shooting was also very fair as to line, all the shots being close to the target.

Upon the introduction of rifled guns it was sought to utilise the large quantity of S.B. ordnance on hand by adapting them in some manner to the new system, and the elongated projectiles. This was at length (in 1863) accomplished by Major Palliser, who proposed to bore out or widen the calibre of these guns, and insert a rifled tube of wrought iron as an inner barrel. This system was adopted with certain S.B. guns, chiefly 32-pounder and 68-pounder S.B., converted into 64-pounder and 80-pounder M.L.R. guns respectively. A number of these latter have been mounted in the colonies, and these are the guns with reference to which experiments have recently been made with a view of testing whether, by means of a steel-jacketed ribbed projectile, and an increased charge, their penetrative capacity may not be greatly expanded. The object of course would be to fire battering charges, or projectiles, capable of piercing armour-plated or ironclad ships. It has, indeed, been found that, not only is the power of these pieces much greater than that of the S.B., from which they are converted, but that their accuracy of fire is beyond comparison better. Major Owen, R.A., remarks of them:—"Our converted Palliser guns are in theory and practice comparatively weak, for the cast iron exterior is too weak, and the material (wrought iron) used for the inner barrel, though strong to resist rupture, is too soft and inelastic, and also liable to flaws. Still, as an economic mode of using up old S.B. guns, and for ordnance not meant to fire large charges, it answers tolerably well. We cannot expect such pieces to be powerful guns, but they will, at any rate, be much more formidable than the S.B. guns from which they are made."

Large guns upon the Woolwich or modified Fraser system, already described, continued to be made and to increase in their dimensions. In 1870, 35-ton guns were constructed, and these were followed in 1873 by 38-ton guns, to carry an 800lb. projectile, with a charge of 110lb. of pebble powder; and in 1875 the parabolic curve (increasing twist) in rifling was adopted with heavy ordnance. It became necessary, however, to shape still larger guns in order to keep pace with the requirements, and indeed for some years a sort of duel—gun versus armour-plate—was carried on. In 1873 the Russians built a man-of-war, Peter the Great, to carry 20 inches of armour; the Italian ships Duilio and Dandolo were to have similar plating, and other nations were following the example. It was, therefore, requisite that a gun should be supplied capable of sending its projectile through 20 inches of iron at 1000 yards, and this led to the construction of the famous 80-ton gun, the first of which was completed in September 1875, several months having been occupied in providing enlarged plant in R.G.F. for the manufacture of this bouncing "Woolwich infant." It was not, however, until 1877 that the construction was finally settled upon in all its details, a number of trials having been made with the experimental gun. It was manufactured on the usual Fraser construction, with slight differences due to its size, the calibre being 16 inches. With a projectile of 1700lb. and a charge of 370lb. of pebble powder it manifested a piercing power of over 21 inches of iron at 1000 yards; and being tested as to range and accuracy it proved equally satisfactory, the mean error of direction being but 1·8 yards, and that of range under 15 yards, at a distance of about 4700 yards, or nearly three miles from the object aimed at. Four of these monsters were supplied to her Majesty's turret ship Inflexible, which had been specially built for them. They are loaded by mechanical gear upon what is known as the "endless chain" or "hydraulic rammer" system. We had, however, already been left behind by a foreign power, for in 1876 a 100-ton R.M.L. gun had been constructed by the Elswick Ordnance Company for the Italian Government as part of the armament for one of their turret ships. Designs were accordingly sent up from the R.G.F. for a still larger cannon, and in due time the 100-ton gun made its appearance, upon the improved Armstrong M.L. construction. The dimensions, &c., are as follow:—Length over all, 32 feet 8 inches; length of bore, 25 feet 8 inches; calibre, 17 inches; twist in rifling parabolic spiral from naught to 1 in 40; actual weight of gun, 220,000lb.; preponderance, 8960lb.; weight of projectile, 2000lb.; bursting charge of projectile, 11·25lb.; charge of powder, 440lb. Four of these have been, or are to be, issued to H.M.S. Conqueror, a sister vessel to the Inflexible. They are casemated, double-turreted, mastless seagoing ironclads of from 24 to 18 inches armour-plate, and with ram bows. The armoured casemate is rectangular, and encloses the middle third of the vessel. The lower edge of the casemate is prolonged fore and aft in a heavy iron deck, which curves forward below the point of the ram. The forecastle and poop structures are short and unarmoured, and the turrets are placed diagonally to open the full fore-and-aft fire.

The limits of this imperfect article have now been attained, and brief as the writer has endeavoured to be he has been unable to do more than glance at many subjects upon which he would willingly have dwelt, whilst others (noticeably machine guns or mitrailleurs) he has been obliged to omit altogether. The patience of the reading community must, however, be respected; and an apt quotation from Major Owen, R.A., Instructor Royal Gun Factories, shall form the conclusion:—

"Our heavy muzzle-loading guns both in weight and number surpass very much those possessed by any other nation, and constitute an armament of which we may well be proud. Their manufacture is simple, their powers and accuracy remarkable, and their cost comparatively small. We have in England carried out at considerable expense more extensive experiments than those ends attempted elsewhere, and are well repaid for our expenditure, the results of which are so satisfactory. So far as one can pry into the future, the history of our guns will be a successful history, being the income of patient perseverance, of scientific investigation, and of a steady disregard on the part of our military authorities of short-lived clamour for novelty prompted by interest, panic, or an exaggerated estimate of the value of some foreign artillery. Not to advance, however, is to go back in artillery as in other sciences; and on this account there is no doubt that we must ever continue to try, and try again, without grudging too much a necessary expenditure upon those experiments which will from time to time be requisite if we wish the history of our guns in the future to show as steady and satisfactory a progress as that achieved during the last quarter of a century."

CASINO RACES.

[By Telegraph.]

(From our own Correspondent.)

CASINO, Friday.

The races to-day were well attended. The following are the results:—

CORINTHIAN STAKES.

Murray's Alma	1
Bundock's Macaroni	2
Edwards' Grey Dawn	3

Other starters were Welcome, Florin, Falcon, Raddy Bourke, Lieut. This was a splendid race. The last part was entirely between the first three horses, the others straggling behind.

CLUB HANDICAP.

Jones' Recruit	1
O'Kelly's Fugleman	2
Fielder's Sir Edward	3

Shamrock and Centurion also started. Miss Jane and Fly were scratched. After one false start, in which Centurion went a mile on his own account, a good start was made, with Shamrock in front. Passing the grand stand, the first time, the order was Shamrock, Recruit, Sir Edward, Centurion, Fugleman. Centurion ran into third place at the back of the course, but soon after was passed by Sir Edward and Fugleman; and in the straight the latter passed the knight. Recruit won by about three lengths; Centurion finished last.

FLUTTER.

W. Pratt's Forrester	1
W. Carmont's Little Nell	2

HACK RACE.

H. F. Smith's The Count	1
Bundock's Slasher	2
Hawthorne's Grey Momus	3

The other starters were Kate Fisher and Quicksilver.

FLYING HANDICAP.

O'Kelly's Maroney, 8st. 4lb.	1
Hawthorne's Shamrock, 6st. 8lb.	2
Jones' Recruit, 7st. 10lb.	3

The other starters were Sir Edward, 7st. 5lb.; Balsamine, 6st.; Ferryman, 8st. Recruit and Maroney raced together for half a mile, when the latter went ahead, and in the straight an exciting race home ensued, Maroney winning by a neck.

THE TURF.

Commotion and Magnet have been scratched for the Metropolitan Stakes. The right to the gate and other racecourse properties for the Tattersall's August meeting will be disposed of by public auction on Monday, and at 4 p.m. the general entry for the Australian Jockey Club Spring Meeting is to take place, when forfeits must also be declared for the Metropolitan Stakes and the Melbourne Cup.

Songster for the Hurdle Race was the only entry from Melbourne for the Hawkesbury meeting.

FOOTBALL.

We are requested to state that on account of the University Club declining to play on Moore Park on Saturday, and the late hour at which the Redfern Club consented to play on the Agricultural Ground, the former was unable to obtain a team for the match to-day. Consequently the engagements between these clubs for to-day has fallen through. It is likely a match will be arranged for next Wednesday.

The first twenties of the Sydney and East Sydney clubs meet to-day in Moore Park.

A match was played between the second Wellesley and Redmyre on last Saturday, on the ground of the latter, when the Wellesleys gained an easy win by eight points, and two points disputed, to four points disputed. The Redmyres were unable to make any show against their opponents, the only ones who in any way prevented a run-over for the Wellesleys being Wickham and Shelley. The winners played well together throughout. The four points claimed by the losers were from drop-kick goal, but were disallowed by one umpire.

Our West Maitland correspondent telegraphs that a football match was played there yesterday afternoon, on the Albion Ground, between the Half-holiday Association and the Northumberland Club. The game, which was very even, resulted in a draw, each side obtaining three goals.

CRICKET.

The Carthona Cricket Club and their friends, numbering about 30, met at the Palace Hotel last Wednesday evening, when the trophies for the past season were presented to the successful winners. After the good things which had been provided for had disappeared, the secretary reported that the club had played 22 matches, of which 18 were won, three lost, and one drawn. The club had to be congratulated upon their success in the late Furness Cup contests, although in the third round they were defeated (for the first time) by the winners of the cup, and they had to feel proud that in that match one of their members scored the highest not-out innings during the cup contests, thereby winning Mr. E. E. Jones' beautiful marble clock and ornaments. The club had, during last season, visited Lithgow, Wollongong, and Maitland, and were hospitably treated in all their country trips. The secretary stated that with the several most prominent junior players who had signified their intention of joining, the club would rank as the best junior club next season. The vice-president, with a few appropriate remarks, then presented the trophies, which were as follows:—Best batting average, T. Dingle; highest individual score, T. Dingle; the vice-president's trophy was also won by T. Dingle. Best bowling trophy was won by C. Lewis. Mr. E. E. Jones' trophy, which T. Dingle had won in the Furness Cup contests, was formally handed over to him. The above players fully deserved their trophies, as they both had worked heart and soul for the honour of the club. The chair then presented the secretary, L. Abrams, with a splendid gold chain, and said that the club's success was mainly due to him, and that they had to be congratulated upon their having such an energetic and hard-working secretary; and as his ambition was to make the club a really good one, there was no reason to doubt that his efforts to make them shine out next season would not be in vain. The healths of the winners of trophies, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and success to the club, were drunk in bumpers. The thanks of the club were accorded to Mr. Furness and to Mr. Ironside for the great interest and zeal he displayed in the Furness Cup contests. Mr. Ironside having suitably responded, and also moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, the Boys then dispersed after having spent a most enjoyable evening, which was interspersed with a few songs. The trophies are now on view at J. Levy's, 160, Oxford-street.

SYDNEY BICYCLE CLUB SPORTS.

We have received the programme for the Sydney Bicycle Club's Champion Race Meeting to-day. A great number of entries appear for each event. Most interest will doubtless be centred in the One and Ten Mile Championships, and it seems a pity so important an event as the One-mile Amateur Championship should be left until the last event but one. Mr. Lee, the present holder of this championship, is such a good and popular rider that the public will be sorry to see him thus practically excluded from all the open events. From the care and energy expended, and the growing interest shown in this sport, a most successful meeting may be anticipated. There can be no better proof of the rapid development of our colonial youth in this branch of athletics than the fact that our scratch riders can afford to give men 350 yards in a mile, while 250 is considered to be the limit in England. Mr. H. R. Stokes, a prominent cyclist from Victoria, will compete in the Mile Champion Race and in some of the open handicap events.

HANDBALL.

Two first-class challenge matches will take place at Ritcheson's Rising Sun Ball Court, Elizabeth-street, this (Saturday) afternoon, and Monday afternoon next. Keenan, the champion handball player of the colonies, will play J. Walsh on Saturday afternoon for a stake of £40, Keenan using his left hand only. On Monday Keenan plays two men, Jones and Lockyer, two well-known players. Play starts each day at 3 p.m. sharp.

The contest for Mr. C. Monk's trophy will take place this afternoon at Double Bay. The race is to be pulled in light skiffs, and as there are no less than nine competitors, it will be pulled in heats.

Our Melbourne correspondent telegraphs that the Victorian Coursing Club West Bourke Plate Meeting was commenced yesterday, when the first ties of West Bourke Plate and Ladies' Plate were gone through.

IMMIGRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Having noticed a letter in your issue of July 23rd from an "Ellora Emigrant," I beg to state that with reference to the statement concerning the ship's sails and running gear, it is altogether inaccurate. The sails are good; she has almost three suits of square sails, the which will bear inspection; in fact she is better found in sails than a large number of ships of the present day. The running gear is also good and efficient. The Ellora was fitted out in London with every requisite for the present voyage, and was well found in everything, in fact more so than most ships.

Your correspondent states that he heard the captain give orders to his men not to take in a certain sail, saying, "It is no use; let it go overboard." I am rather surprised, and doubt very much if a British shipmaster of the nineteenth century should make use of such an expression. Of course if such was the case the sails would perhaps appear "rotten" to "An Ellora Emigrant."

As regards Captain Haffenden being appointed hurriedly to the command of the Ellora, it is no such thing. Captain Haffenden was appointed to the ship before she arrived home from her former voyage.

The Ellora is seven years old, she was built for the Indian immigration trade, and has carried Indian immigrants for the past five years; she is a favourite ship in that trade. She has made four passages from London to Calcutta under 90 days, and has been noted for her quick voyages. Her late passage is by far the longest she has ever made.

ONE WHO KNOWS THE ELLORA.

Dr. Schliemann has in the press a new work on Troy, giving an account of his recent excavation of a larger town than any he has hitherto laid bare. These last discoveries will modify some of the inferences drawn from his previous excavations, but will confirm the general conclusion that the town of which the siege gave rise to the ballads of the "Iliad" was situated at Hissarlik.

BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

A general meeting of the New South Wales branch of the British Medical Association was held last evening in the Royal Society's rooms, Elizabeth-street, there being present:—Drs. Mackellar (president), O'Reilly, Anderson, Stuart, Sir Alfred Roberts, Drs. M'Cormick, Fortescue, Callaghan, Watson, Marano, Foreman, Belgrave, Renwick, Maclaurin, Joseph Beattie, Bedford, Wright, Jockel, Jones, Norrie, Steel, M'Culloch, Craig Dixon, Parker, Quaife, Power, Ewan, Hawkins, Hurst, Brady, Pickburn, Shewen, and the honorary secretary (Dr. W. Edward Warren). Dr. Thorpe, of the Bombay Army Medical Department, attended as a visitor. The hon. secretary (Dr. W. Edward Warren) read the minutes of the previous general meeting, which were adopted. The president announced that since last meeting Dr. M'Kilop, of Goulburn, and Dr. Alex. M'Cormack had been elected members of the society. Dr. Norrie exhibited a pathological specimen, and read notes thereon. A vote of thanks was passed to the exhibitor, on the motion of Professor Stuart, seconded by Dr. O'Reilly. The report of the sub-committee appointed to inquire into the advisableness or otherwise of teaching anatomy and physiology in the Public schools of the colony was then read by the hon. secretary. This report has already been published in our columns.

Dr. Belgrave said that while he agreed with the general tenor of the report, he thought that the conclusions required modification. With reference to teaching physiology in Public schools, it occurred to him that the object in view might be to some extent accomplished by elementary knowledge of anatomy and physiology being imparted to boys between 13 and 14 in the Public schools. In addition to that it occurred to him that in the training schools sufficient knowledge might be imparted to the ordinary candidates for the position of Public school teachers, and enable them to superintend the communication of such knowledge to the pupils of the age he had mentioned. It was not necessary to communicate such elementary knowledge as would require teachers so thoroughly skilled in biological science as the report implied. The reading lessons afforded excellent opportunities for teaching numerous subjects which were not now taught, and which could be conveniently taught. Lessons in biology could be communicated in that way without inconvenience. As to the recommendation which the report made that these lectures should be delivered to general students in the University, he submitted that it was not necessary that these lectures should usurp the place of Greek or the higher mathematics. The two studies were of a totally different character; but he was of opinion that biology should form one of the subjects to be taught to students of the University. If they modified the proposals of the report they might succeed, whereas if they endeavoured to make the subject of biology usurp the place of two subjects mentioned in the report they would probably not succeed. They had the highest authority, that of Professor Huxley, for saying that they could communicate in 25 lectures sufficient knowledge of physiology and anatomy.

Dr. Ewan said that while he agreed with much of the report, he also agreed with some of Dr. Belgrave's suggestions. If the knowledge of the teachers was to be utilised at all, their knowledge should be of a thorough character; and he agreed with the recommendation of the report that the training should commence at the University. At the same time they must bear in mind that it would be a long time before they would thus turn out a body of teachers for the whole community, and for that reason he would suggest that in certain districts of the colony they should appoint competent men to give preliminary instruction in the subject of anatomy, physiology, and hygiene. He strongly disapproved of any proposal to abolish Latin and Greek, and substitute anatomy and physiology. With some slight modifications, he would like to see the report adopted.

Dr. Hurst said this was a very valuable report, but he did not agree with all its recommendations. All that it was required for the general population to know were the elementary laws of hygiene, and to know hygiene they must know a certain amount of anatomy and physiology. It would be impossible to give a thorough knowledge of anatomy and physiology in an ordinary university course, but the required amount of elementary knowledge of these subjects might be given in the proposed new High school or in the first year of the ordinary university course; he objected to any proposal to leave Greek or the higher mathematics out of the ordinary university course. All that was necessary was that an elementary knowledge of physiology and anatomy and hygiene should be incorporated in the first year of the university course.

Professor Stuart, after complimenting the sub-committee on its report, expressed his desire that in what he was about to say he would be understood to have no personal motive, but spoke only having regard to the good of the colony and of his fellow-colonists. He had lately had an opportunity of gauging, perhaps better than anyone else in recent times in this colony, how much physiology and anatomy was possessed by the educated portion of this colony. He had lately been requested to lecture to the Sydney School of Nurses, and had addressed many young ladies, all of whom he dared say would be deemed to be well educated. There were about 150 ladies, and he would be bound to say that not one of them knew anything concerning the anatomy or physiology of their bodies. They had not the faintest idea of what really a muscle, nerve, or sinew was, and these ladies he believed were to be taken as types of the whole. It was absolutely ridiculous that people should be called well educated and yet be as ignorant as he had said. It had been well said that if a man desired to learn a thing quickly and well he must take an interest in it, and there was nothing in the world which could be taught to men, women, and children which excited an interest so rapidly as information concerning the structure and working of the human body. Professors, schoolmasters, and all teachers, knew how difficult it was to get pupils to get on with a study till they became interested, when they at once commenced to learn. They had here two subjects eminently calculated to awaken a lively interest; but if the teaching of anatomy and physiology were to be of any value at all, it would be absolutely and certainly necessary not to have it "book teaching," and he would even go further and would say it must not be, by diagram or model, or such means as outlines in coloured chalk upon the blackboard, but it must be whether the student were a boy of 13 or 14 years of age or a lad of 17 or 18 years of age in the university, from the thing itself. He referred to the foolish sentiment of false delicacy which was often exhibited in respect to dissecting and teaching from the body of a dead animal. Many who would pass a butcher's shop and see the body of a dead sheep hanging there would experience no such feeling, but let it but be laid for dissection on the table of the school, and the very opposite would be the case. This was foolish and over tender sentimentalism. The broad study of physiology and anatomy could be taught and nothing improper whatever need be introduced. Nothing could be easier than to thus teach the students from the dead body of an animal such as the sheep, and the only difficulty he could perceive was to get a man who was capable of doing it. That difficulty might be thought be overcome. There was nothing in this world easier than that the teachers who were being trained in the Fort-street school should go to the University and obtain a little training in anatomy and physiology there. He disagreed with Dr. Ewan in his statement that the teaching must be "thorough." Of course that gentleman might mean one thing by thorough and he (Professor Stuart) another. What he (the speaker) meant by thorough was that whilst in describing, say, the sartorious muscle, an interesting description of its functions, and so on, would be given, there would be no necessity for the teacher to impart so "thorough" a knowledge of it as to go into all the minutiæ, its origen, its superficial and its deep course, and so on. As to the relative value of Greek as a study—and of the dead languages Greek seemed in this colony to have been especially fixed upon for sacrifice, at all events he knew it stood out very prominently in this colony as one of the dead languages—he would rather have some Greek with some anatomy and physiology than all Greek and no anatomy and physiology, but he did not think really that he would rather have a lot of anatomy and physiology and no Greek at all. He thought both were necessary to a good general education, and perhaps the preponderance might be given to Greek. Of course the matter was open to discussions. Object lessons were compulsory in the colony at present, and he did not know anything that could be more useful as an object lesson than anatomy and physiology. What could be easier, what could be better, than to substitute for those too often meaningless object lessons these useful anatomy and physiology lessons? Then came the question how many lessons in anatomy and physiology should be given to a teacher? He thought about 25 lessons of an hour each would be sufficient to teach a teacher what he ought to know. In 25 lessons the teacher could be taught all that he would require to retail to the pupils. Then how many lessons would he require to give the pupils? He thought that 15 or 20 lessons would be sufficient. He had been told by one of the inspectors of schools in England that the teaching of physiology in the schools there was a farce; and if we attempted to introduce that system here, it would be a farce here.

Dr. Beattie said he could not understand how twenty-five lectures, no matter how delivered, could under any circumstances be supposed to convey what might be considered a thorough knowledge of physiology. [Dr. Stuart: I did not say that that would give a thorough knowledge.] As to the instruction to be given in the Public schools, he thought that anything more than the outlines of anatomy and physiology was unnecessary.

Dr. Ewan said that his idea was that those who taught the subject should have a thorough knowledge of the subjects, and that might be secured by appointing the medical men in certain districts to impart the information.

Mr. M'Laurin said that they seemed to be all pretty well agreed on the main points. He was still of opinion that it was out of the question to teach boys anatomy and physiology. They must be practical in their proposals. As Professor Stuart had told them, physiology in the English schools was a farce, and if they introduced the same kind of teaching in this country it would also be a farce. To teach physiology they must have people competent to teach, and there was only one place where they could do that, and that was in the University. What they said in their report was not that Greek should be struck out of the curriculum, but that it should be optional to study anatomy or Greek. Greek was already optional, so that the report really proposed no new system. A thorough knowledge of Greek was, no doubt, exceedingly useful, but a smattering of that language, which a man might forget in 12 months' time, was not so; and how many thorough Greek scholars were there in the profession, or in that room that night? (Laughter.) The general knowledge of Greek was very trifling, and it was absurd to talk of its being absolutely indispensible in the profession. It was an elegant accomplishment, and, as he had said, a thorough knowledge of it was very useful; but to be able to cudgel the sense out of a few simple quick sentences, what was that? He did not refer, be it understood, to Latin. He held that the proposal to allow a student at the University to take up anatomy and physiology instead of Greek was unobjectionable. As to the higher mathematics, well he did not think there were half a dozen in the room who knew anything about the integral calculus. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) What was the use of talking about that as a valuable and useful mental acquirement? He thought anatomy and physiology not only more useful in a mere practical sense, but also more useful as a training for the mind. It was not the intention of the sub-committee to depreciate the value of Greek, or to expel it from the University curriculum, but they simply wished it to be as Greek was—one of the optional subjects—that, if desired, it could be taken in the place of that language.

Dr. Fortescue also referred to the misunderstanding of the views which the sub-committee entertained about Greek, which, as Dr. Maclaurin had well said, they had no desire to undervalue but only to give the option of taking physiology or anatomy in its place at the University examinations. Those who had the time might become masters of Greek, Latin, and Sanscrit, and a dozen other dead languages; but what the sub-committee desired was to admit for the first time into the University curriculum the most important subject which a man could learn in reference to his position here and that of those around him—namely, the study of physiology. What other subject could be of such pre-eminent importance to every man of culture, to every man of education, as the study of the human frame? The only difference of opinion that appeared to exist was as to how the study should be taught. Whilst agreeing with every word in the report, he would have no objection to have the experiment tried of instructing—if it could be brought about in any satisfactory way—a certain number of the teachers of the Public schools by Professor Stuart, or any one competent to so instruct them. He had grave doubts, however, whether men so imperfectly instructed as these teachers would be would be able to teach the subject with credit to themselves or advantage to their pupils.

Dr. O'Reilly moved the adoption of the report. He thought that all that was intended, or they could hope for, was that the children of the Public schools should become acquainted with the knowledge imparted in such works as those prepared for that purpose by Huxley and Foster. With physiology and anatomy would also be associated the subject of hygiene.

Dr. Warren seconded the motion. They appeared to be all agreed that these subjects should be taught in the Public schools, but some thought the instruction should be elementary, and others thought it should be more thorough. He certainly thought that the teachers should be men who understood their business thoroughly. Only men who were thoroughly well up in the subject should be appointed to impart instruction in those subjects. They had a teacher of music who visited the Public schools, and in the same way they might have elementary instruction given by competent men in anatomy and physiology and hygiene. Such a teacher should be appointed by the Government, and should be a professional man, and not one who merely had a smattering of the subject. He agreed with those who contended that Greek should not be usurped, but anatomy might be made an optional subject as the president had stated. He also agreed that the reading lessons might be utilised in imparting this kind of instruction.

Dr. Ewan moved that the report be adopted, with the omission of all the latter part after the words, "How, then, are we to effect this great revolution?"

Dr. Hurst moved that the report be adopted, with the omission of the last three paragraphs:—"1. That an efficient system of quarantine is essential to the health and prosperity of the colonies of Australasia. 2. That the geographical position of these colonies is highly favourable to the development of the best results of a fully and well-organised quarantine. 3. That such a system should be framed and conducted upon federal principles, combining efficiency, humanity, and hospitality. 4. That the central position of Sydney renders it desirable that the Government of New South Wales should initiate a conference of all the other Australian colonies to consider and frame a system founded upon the before mentioned principles." He understood federal quarantine to mean—1. A system of quarantine which was designed, agreed upon, and carried out by the unanimous consent and control, and at the expense of the Australasian colonies, including New Zealand. 2. The system to consist of—(a) general quarantine, to be carried out at the first port of entrez; (b) local quarantine, to be conducted at intermediate and ultimate ports. 3. The general quarantine depots to be so situated and organised as to ensure immunity from all danger of infection to the colony in which it was located.

Dr. Fortescue seconded the resolutions.

Dr. Ewan supported the resolutions. There was a common danger threatening these colonies, and the community was much indebted to the president for the action he had taken.

The resolutions were carried unanimously, and it was then resolved that these resolutions be transmitted to the Government.

THE CAUSATION OF TYPHOID FEVER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Dr. Hope, remarking on my letter on the above subject, says that, if I consider the medical faculty prejudiced, he is afraid the profession will hesitate to follow up my challenges. Dear me, how sensitive the profession must be, to be sure. I am not aware I challenged the profession, but if the publication of my letter was a challenge, I need only say that my opinions have been before the profession for many months, and were published in the Australasian Medical Gazette, in reply to a paper in that journal on this subject by a leading member of the profession in Sydney, who advocated the doctrine of contagion by the operation of a specific germ as the sole cause of typhoid; and so far he and the profession have acquiesced in my views, if silence may be construed into acquiescence. And here I may say that it is not my fault that this discussion, if discussion it may be called, was not continued in the medical journal. The profession in Sydney have often discussed similar subjects in the public press, notably during the smallpox scare; but I have just learned that what is quite proper for a Sydney doctor to do is highly improper for a country one. After all, I think the columns of the leading journal are the proper place for the discussion of this subject to the extent I mean to deal with it, as laymen are quite as capable of understanding its merits as members of the profession, and the subject is of vital interest to all. I did not use the word prejudice in an offensive sense; quite the contrary, as I was so influenced myself by the teaching of English pathologists during my student days that I only ventured after 18 years' colonial experience to publish my opinions to the medical world, which I did in 1880, in the British Medical Journal, on my return from the war in South Africa, and in a letter to Sir Joseph Fayrer, which he has done me the honour to publish in his work, just out, "On the Climate and Fevers of India." My opinions are quite in accord with those of Sir Joseph on this matter, as expressed in the following passage from a letter I recently received from him, which letter was published in the Australasian Medical Gazette:—"Depend on it the time will come when continued fevers, with Peyerian ulceration, diarrhœa, &c., will not be ascribed only to an organic germ, a contagium derived from ulcerated bowels. I am not prepared to say that this is not frequently the cause, but that it is not the sole cause I have long been convinced. Any fever may, under certain conditions, assume this phase, and none more likely to do so than those that originate in organic, miasmatic, vegetable, or animal. Of the importance of pure water, pure air, &c., no one can doubt; but I do not believe they cause either fever, cholera, or dysentery—all nearly allied—by the operation of an organic germ, but by generally deranging and predisposing the individual to suffer." I only differed from my professional brethren in not accepting my early teaching as infallible, which I was not expected to do; and when I met on my arrival in New Zealand, in 1863, with what was then called "colonial fever," I first by dissection at the hospital in Westland proved the fever to be typhoid, and "as the causes for typhoid did not exist" there—that is, a specific contagion to account for it—I set about to find the actual cause instead of giving the fever a new name; but it was only after studying pathology 16 years afterwards under Professor Charlton Bastion, who believes in and teaches abiogenesis or spontaneous generation, that I saw my way to publish my opinion on this matter to the medical world, such was my prejudice in favour of the opinions of English pathologists. To illustrate further the baneful effects of theories first promulgated to explain facts, but ultimately accepted on insufficient grounds as established doctrines or truth, I quote the following from my letter to Sir Joseph Fayrer, before referred to:—"I may say àpropos of this, and in conclusion, that some of the army surgeons and others in South Africa call the fever in question a "hybrid fever," between typhoid and remittent, and treat it as remittent with large doses of quinine. When I inquired the meaning of the term, or the reason for its application, I found it was not because the fever presented any remission or differed essentially from typhoid fever as it occurs in this (England) country, but because of the difficulty of accounting under the circumstances for true typhoid by those who hold the views of Dr. Budd, or Sir Thomas Watson, or even those of the lamented Dr. Murchison, as to its genesis or etiology. No doubt the profession here and in New Zealand reasoned in this manner, and in the manner I stated in my previous letter—that is, in a circle—when they accepted the popular name, viz., "colonial fever;" and they reasoned in the same way when, having recognised the fever as typhoid, they ascribed it to contagion, without evidence that such was its etiology. It is thus that theories have always been stumbling blocks in the way of the advance of medical science. As one fact is worth twenty theories, here is an example of the "spontaneous generation," or, as I believe with Sir Joseph Fayrer, the miasmatic, or malarial, or climatic origin of the fever in this district, which terminated fatally. But first I may say that it was through the publication of my paper in the British Medical Journal that Sir Joseph was able to collect the mass of evidence from every part of the Empire he has given in his work before mentioned in favour of the above view of the etiology of the fever in question, as opposed to contagion or pythogenesis—that is, decomposing or fermenting organic matter. It was that of a young man, aged 22 years, living on his father's selection, about 14 miles from Mudgee, on the tableland some miles above the surrounding plain, on an eminence, allowing of drainage on all sides; and so steep was the ascent to the patients' residence that I had to leave my horses and buggy behind me, and ride on horseback four miles to reach the place. Nothing could be more perfect than the sanitary arrangements of the place. The water in use was obtained from a spring some distance from the house, and everything about the house was cleanly and orderly. The only cultivation for miles around was a small garden, and there was no habitation within four miles, and no traffic, and none of the members of the household had been absent from home for some time. I could multiply cases of this kind in this district, and in the neighbouring colonies, that came under my own observation. The cases here have occurred sporadically, several being attacked simultaneously, or in immediate succession, in districts the most remote from each other, and away from high roads, and without intercommunication, and in no instance was a second person attacked in the same house, or in an adjoining house, and I never, during my 20 years' experience of the fever here and in New Zealand, knew an instance of such. Three of the cases are in the local hospital—a father and his two sons—all of whom came from different districts, 13 to 40 miles apart, and strange to say the two sons were admitted on the same day, and gave different names, although they recognised each other as brothers; one of the patients in his delirium having forgotten his own name. This circumstance I think shows a family predisposition to the disease, for one can scarcely call it a mere coincidence. In all these cases contagion was out of the question, as the patient's dwellings were in the bush far away from high roads, and neither himself nor his associates had communication with the outer world. The pythogenic theory is also out of court, and can give no evidence, as there was no sewer gas, and the privies, where they existed, were far from the house and well kept, and the water supply was free from contamination by sewage or other decomposing organic matter, being mostly rain water collected and stored in iron tanks, and there was no such matter in or near the dwellings, which were more than ordinarily cleanly and orderly. The soil in the neighbourhood was untilled in all cases, except an acre or so of a garden close to the house. The timber and "scrub" had in nearly every case been removed from the ground, thus exposing it to solar and atmospheric influences. Paludal, telluric, or general climatic influences, were present only to account for the disease. When we add to this evidence the fact that the disease occurs simultaneously, or in immediate succession, in town and country in the different colonies, the evidence against contagion, or pythogenesis, is complete, and the influence of season, &c., is clearly apparent. Dr. Hope evidently believes in the germ theory as an established fact. Indeed, he revels in germs, although it is only the latest of the many brought forward to explain what is known as zymotic, or specific infectious diseases, called zymotic because before the germ theory was introduced those diseases were supposed to be caused by a zyme, or ferment. But up to the present the existence of such germs or ferments have not been satisfactorily proved to exist, any more than the specific zyme or ferment were proved to exist, although every tyro who has looked into the end of a microscope a dozen times would fancy he has found a trace. It is, I think, a fortunate thing for him, and for all of us, that he has not; for if every disease had its own specific germ, and the air, water, &c., were loaded with such germs, as its supporters affirm, I can only say God help us; for the germs which we would take into our bodies with every breath, and every "bite and sup," would not. Even if the germ theory was an established truth, and not a mere hypothesis, we would still have to explain the modus operandi—how they produced the disease or its phenomena, which is the same thing. "The germ theory," says Beckington, "is an assumption of causes, of the existence of which we have no distinct proof to account for effects which they do not explain." Notwithstanding the popularity of this theory, which almost amounts to a craze during the last few years the tendency of modern pathology is to disprove the specificity of disease altogether. But here I must take my leave of both it and Dr. Hope, both, however, with the greatest respect. Both in England and America the opinion is gaining strength that the ordinary primary causes to which typhoid and other zymotic diseases are usually ascribed are insufficient to explain the facts. I take the following from the Cincinnatti Lancet and Critic for April 7, 1883:—A physician in New England has informed the writer that a few years ago he addressed letters to about 50 practitioners in differents parts of the State in which he practised, asking their experience in reference to outbreaks of typhoid. The answers, with very few exceptions, were that the rural sections suffered the most, whether in regard to proportionate number of cases or of fatality. Thus it now appears, as it did in the time of Nathan Smith and James Jackson, that typhoid fever outbreaks occurred without the possibility of referring them to the conjectural local agencies now in favour. Physicians who have not enjoyed sufficient opportunities to observe the origin and progress of typhoid fever, and sanitarians without medical experience, are the most positive in opinion in regard to the primary cause of typhoid fever, whilst Trousseau, Flint, Murchison, and many others of similar experience and sagacity freely admit the obscurity of the subject and the difficulty of determining the influence of local agencies in the production of typhoid fever as compared with causes of a general character over which we have no control, as in telluric or atmospheric conditions involving thermometric hygometric, and heteric states and their influence singly or combined. I will conclude with the following from the pen of Dr. J. Syer Bristowe, author of a "Handbook of Practice of Physic," and one of the physicians to the St. Thomas' Hospital, London, President of the Society of Medical Officers of Health:—"If we look to the remarkable influence which simple variations of temperature and peculiarities of the season exert on the mortuary returns in respect both of the number of deaths and the character of the fatal diseases, and compare those with the comparatively small effect on the death rate of even one of the most fatal of the zymotic diseases, or with the insignificant influence of deaths from typhoid fever, diphtheria, pyæmia, puerperal fever, and other affections over which sanitary science is supposed to exert a specially valuable influence, we can scarcely avoid, I think, seeing that on similar grounds the deaths saved directly by sanitary labours on which we are engaged must, under any circumstances, be so few annually as to produce no distinct and unmistakable effect on the mortuary rates." I believe the popular opinion in Sydney is that our present visitation of typhoid had its origin in filthy dairies. I quote the following as pertinent:—"But in this connection let us revert to the condition of agriculture and husbandry in regard to household dairies and stable economy half a century ago. At this period agricultural journals or other works pertaining to those subjects were scarcely known whilst for very many years past they have been disseminated over the land, throwing a flood of light upon all that concerns agriculture and husbandry, the good effects of which are now visible on every side. It might here be rationally asked what was the state of the country at the early period named, and was there not much more typhoid fever than has since occurred. On the contrary, typhoid fever, and also diphtheria, were almost unknown at that time whilst bilious, remittent, not generally regarded as a filth disease, prevailed."

Apologising for trespassing so far on your space, but I hope not unprofitably, I am, &c.,

TRAINED NURSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Will "A Member of the Medical Staff" favour your readers with a few particulars concerning his experience of "Lady Nurses," in order that his fitness to judge of the merits of nurses may be attested.

The public would gladly hear how and where he found that "discipline, obedience, and subordination are simply impossible" to ladies, and upon what grounds he asserts that "the English lady of highest culture, refinement, well born and well bred, will not, cannot, cannot even try, to obey."

Also, how "it is hard to teach a 'lady' to be precise, and exact, and methodical," and what part "A Member of the Medical Staff" has taken in attempts to teach such.

Meantime, I leave the vindication of English or other ladies to abler pens, and ask in amazement how one whose experience of English women has been so unhappy can presume to set up for an authority. I am, &c.,

CONVALESCENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—In answer to the letter of "Civis Romanus" which appeared last Wednesday, August 1, I have again to draw attention to his statement which runs thus:—"For years the Sydney faculty have asserted that during four months of the year physicians' cases rarely recover in it, but invariably require to leave it to assure their convalescence."

This is repeated now, as "every physician who has been connected with the Macquarie-street Hospital during the last 20 years," &c.

It is easy to make a simple statement however incorrect, especially under a nom de plume, I submit that the onus of proof rests upon the person making a statement.

If "Civis Romanus'" statement be true I very much regret indeed that I have been so totally ignorant of such a state of affairs, though for five years in connection with the hospital.

"Civis Romanus," by a most extraordinary method of interpretation, hints that the convalescent hospital I referred to was only for summer patients. All others who have read my letter with attention will have understood that I meant a convalescent home for all seasons of the year.

Such homes one finds in connection with the hospitals of some of the larger cities of Britain. I am, &c.,

The Tory and Whig Doctrines of Church and State.—Writing in the current number of The Nineteenth Century Mr. George W. E. Russell, M.P., by birth a thoroughbred Whig, makes the following remarks on the Tory and Whig doctrines of Church and State:—"The Tory doctrine of Church and State, if unsound and untenable, had at any rate a generous and a religious side. In the Tory view, establishment was to a Church what a charter of incorporation is to a town. It gave a legal status, a methodical government, and self-controlling powers. But in the Whig view establishment was merely annexation. The State became absolute master, and the subject population lost all control over their own affairs. They might be justly and mildly ruled, but they had no power or right to rule themselves. Whiggery dreads and opposes all movements which resemble or tend towards disestablishment, not for the Church's sake, but for its own. An eminent Whig peer once said to the present writer, 'I am utterly opposed to disestablishment; and I will tell you why. As long as the Church is established we can kick the parsons. But once disestablish it, and, begad! they will kick us.' The Whig doctrine of Church and State all over."

DEPUTATIONS.

THE SYDNEY HOSPITAL.

A deputation, consisting of the following members of the Sydney Hospital board of directors, viz., Dr. Arthur Renwick (president), Rev. Canon Stephen and Mr. J. R. Street (vice-presidents), Archdeacon King, Mr. F. Abigail, M.L.A., Mr. S. Merriman, Mr. E. T. Penfold, Mr. J. Graham, Mr. R. M'Coy, Mr. I. J. Josephson, Mr. M. Chapman, Mr. S. Burdekin, and Mr. H. D. Russell (secretary), interviewed the Colonial Secretary yesterday morning with the object of urging upon the Government—(1) the necessity for the establishment of a fever and contagious diseases hospital; (2) the placing of a sum of £50,000 on the Estimates in aid of the building fund; (3) the advisability of refraining from carrying out the proposals to convert the institution at Moorecliff for the treatment of ophthalmic diseases into a lock hospital.

Dr. Renwick was the first to speak on behalf of the deputation. He said that the deputation had been formed for the purpose of representing to the Government certain matters which were of very great importance in connection with the hospital and the public, and which they thought should be at once brought under the cognisance of the Colonial Secretary, as head of the Government. He would state those matters seriatim. The first had reference to the establishment of an institution for infectious diseases in the city, or in its neighbourhood. Many years ago several of the gentlemen present, including himself, attended a similar deputation to submit the importance of establishing an institution of that character in the city, and many letters emanating from the hospital authorities, and treating on the subject, had appeared in the press, but up to the present time no definite action had been taken in the matter. In regard to the establishment of the proposed hospital, he would refer to certain cases. When a patient was afflicted with scarlet fever or some other contagious disease, and was brought to a hospital in town, there were no provisions in the institution for the treatment of the case. On one or two occasions patients had been refused admission, and they have either had to be accommodated in private houses, or the police have had to take charge of them, and make provision for them. They could not be admitted into the hospital, and they could not gain admission into a benevolent asylum. The board of directors of the Sydney Hospital therefore, after fully considering the matter, determined once more to represent it to the Government. They suggested that the Government should be asked to establish a branch in connection with the hospital for the reception of patients suffering from infectious diseases—which he thought would be a rather objectionable proceeding—or that they should adopt the Little Bay hospital for that purpose, and construct a tramway to it. That was the first point which the deputation wished to convey to the Government. The next matter which he would refer to was touching the hospital structure. The deputation were desirous that the Government should assist the hospital board in completing the structure which was now being erected as a permanent hospital of the city. They had observed with some surprise that the objections which were raised some five or six years ago as regards the site and the character of the building had again been ventilated. And then the old agitation with reference to removing the hospital to Flagstaff Hill had been renewed. The deputation had also observed that it was suggested that the new building would be very useful for public offices. Now, in all the actions taken by the board of directors they had been actuated by one motive, and that motive was to obtain the best available site, the healthiest, and most convenient, for the building. There could be no doubt whatever that anyone could not refer to the papers without seeing that the arguments which were employed some years ago, when the building was commenced, were overwhelmingly in favour of the present site. It was true that the Flagstaff Hill site, which was proposed as an alternative one, was now only suggested in the same way, but previous Governments had held that it would be unwise to adopt it. The present site was a most central one, and it was much appreciated by the people in both the city and suburbs. Some objection had been raised as regards the material used in the construction of the building; but although it consisted of sandstone, which was of a porous nature, the internal walls would receive an antiseptic application, and this would probably remove the objection now urged against the construction of the building with the material mentioned. It was the intention of the builders to apply to the walls a substance which would prevent the germs of disease attaching themselves to them, and thus render them unobjectionable. The board of directors thought that, as they were erecting a building to last for a considerable period—in fact, for ever—it was desirable that it should be made as handsome as possible, so long as no useless expense was incurred. He was perfectly satisfied that if anyone would examine the work already accomplished he would come to the conclusion that the building could never be used for public offices. An examination of the plans of the structure would reveal the same opinion. It could never be used for public offices, but for an hospital alone. Independent of the main building, there were other structures—viz., the Nightingale wing and such like—which would require a considerable sum of money. These would have to be removed if the building were converted into one for public offices. With regard to the land, the board of directors had obtained a grant of it from the Crown, and the deed expressly stated that the land was to be employed for hospital purposes. The board had been incorporated by Act of Parliament, which had provided for the proper representation of the Government on the directory. Representatives of the Government were amongst the members of the board, and in all the matters which had transpired in connection therewith they had taken an active part. The plans now being carried into effect were submitted for the approval of the Government before a stone was ever laid, and the board had spent the whole of the money which it had received up to the present time in aid of the building, and it was willing to further spend the whole of the money which they could receive by legitimate means for the purpose in completing the structure. The directors thought that they had a good claim on the Government, knowing that they were actuated by purely philanthropic motives, and moreover, in consequence of the sympathy which the Government had with the sick of the city. Up to the present time the amount which had been expended, or at least would be expended when the contracts now in existence were finished, amounted to £70,000. It was the intention of the directors at first to make a complete hospital, and when finished the cost would have been a little over £200,000, but the works now in hand, and which would render the hospital fit for its present purpose—that was, to contain 200 beds, would cost a little more than £150,000. The deputation wished to impress upon the Government the fact that in regard to the money already expended the directors had been most careful. It was true that objections had been raised against some portions of the building on the ground that they were extravagant. For instance, the laundry had been opposed, but it had been forgotten that the directors when that portion of the building was commenced, found that instead of being able to erect a small laundry it would be necessary, on account of the nature of the soil, to have a second floor, and therefore it had cost double of what was originally anticipated it would cost. Then it had been suggested that the laundry might have been constructed of brick, but it was decided by the directors that the building should be uniform throughout. He did not think it was necessary for him to speak at greater length, for he knew that the Colonial Secretary was fully aware of the merits of the case. All that he wished to further impress upon the Government was that the additional sum of money required for the completion of the building would not be anything like what had been represented outside. The directors would not go to farther expense than £170,000, though to complete the building entirely it would cost altogether £209,000. They therefore asked that a sum of £50,000 should be placed on the Estimates for the purpose of assisting in the completion of the work. The third and last matter which the deputation wished to bring under the notice of the Government was the proposal which had been made to convert the Moorecliff Hospital, which was used as a place for the treatment of ophthalmic diseases into a lock hospital. When the directors found that the Sydney Hospital was in a crowded state they, with the assistance, and under the directions of the Government, took possession of the Moorecliff Hospital. It had been represented to the Government that the operations performed there were more successful than those ever performed before, in this colony at least. That the hospital at Moorecliff was admirably suited for a lying-in-hospital there could be no doubt, but as the directors had gone to great expense and personal trouble in making it as perfect as possible, they thought that it should be continued for its present purpose on that account, and also in the interests of persons affected by ophthalmic diseases. However, the directors would submit to the decision of the Government in the matter, but at the same time the deputation would urge upon them the undesirability of changing the character of the institution to one of a lock hospital. The above views he had to represent to the Government, as president of the Sydney Hospital.

Archdeacon King said that he could bear testimony to the manner in which the Moorecliff Hospital was at present conducted. He had heard the patients frequently express gratification for the treatment they received, and the comforts which they experienced in the institution. As a resident of the locality, he would be very sorry to see it converted into a lock hospital. He had a personal objection also, but more on a private ground than on any other, to such a course being taken. According to arrangements which had been made, he was able to provide religious consolation for the patients in the institution, and if it were substituted by a lock hospital, a new set of arrangements would require to be entered into, and they would be of such a different class to those in existence that probably it would be beyond his power to carry them out. Moreover, it was well known that sailors from the various ships in harbour infested the locality in large numbers, and when under the influence of drink, as many of them were often seen on returning to their vessels, they might be induced to commit certain pranks in connection with the institution if they had a knowledge of the class of inhabitants it would possess in the event of its being converted into a lock hospital.

Mr. Merriman concurred with the remarks of the previous speaker, and on the ground of morality he strongly protested against the conversion of the Moorecliff Hospital into a lock hospital. As regards the site of the Infirmary and the advocacy of the selection of the Flagstaff-hill for the purpose, he thought the Colonial Secretary would agree with him in stating that there were now very few public reserves in the city. It would therefore be unfair to the people to take up the Flagstaff-hill for a hospital ground, as it was the most important reserve in Sydney.

Mr. Abigail objected to the establishment of a lock hospital at Moorecliff, and he further opposed the suggestion to adopt the Flagstaff-hill as a site for any hospital. With regard to the Government being represented on the hospital board by certain members, as he was one of those, he must say that he had not taken an active part in all that had transpired in connection with the new building. His first conviction was that the building had been commenced in a too expensive manner. He thought that all the advantages of a hospital could have been realised by the expenditure of half the sum, and he took the present opportunity for expressing his disapproval of the expensive character of the building.

Rev. Canon Stephen said that the principal question was whether the Government would give the money asked for. It was desirable that an answer should be at once obtained in reference to that point, and he would ask the Colonial Secretary whether he would recommend it.

Mr. Thomas Rowe, architect for the new structure, who accompanied the deputation, said that it had been suggested that the building should have been constructed of brick, but he was certain that a cry would have been soon raised if that suggestion had been carried into effect. The outside of the stone of which it was being built was more porous than brick, but he found that the stone itself absorbed no more moisture than the hardest compressed brick. It was obtained from the Pyrmont quarries, and it was as hard as Melbourne bluestone.

Mr. Stuart asked what was the amount of accommodation to be provided.

Dr. Renwick replied that there would be perhaps 250 beds, which would include those in private wards for the use of paying patients. There was an additional block to be erected, which would extend through to the Domain, and it was to form a central pavilion. The building would occupy about three acres of ground altogether.

Mr. Stuart: You say that £70,000 has been expended on the present contracts, and you now ask for a sum of money in order to have the contracts completed.

Dr. Renwick: It is to enable us to go on with the building now in course of erection.

Mr. Stuart: Have you sufficient funds in hand to complete the present contract?

Dr. Renwick: No. We are three or four thousand pounds short.

Mr. Stuart: How was the money raised?

Dr. Renwick: The original agreement was that we should receive £25,000 from the Crown. We had £20,000 of our own money. Since that time we have obtained £20,000 more from the Government, and there are a few additional sums which make up the £70,000.

Mr. Abigail: It will cost over £200,000 to complete the work.

Mr. Stuart then said: As regards the Infectious Diseases Hospital, I am perfectly in accord with your views. It is necessary that a hospital of that character should be built somewhere. I have difficulty in saying where it should be erected, because one is to consider in a permanent degree the safety of the public outside as well as the comforts of those who have been admitted to the institution. The second question is a very important one, and I will approach it presently. With reference to the third matter, I have no strong feeling against the Moorecliff Hospital existing in its present state, although it has many advantages in favour of its conversion into a Lock Hospital. Although it is easy of access, it is in a secluded position, and is elevated on a cliff, as its name implies. I have no special feeling in the matter either one way or the other, and my only object for giving the proposal to change it into a Lock Hospital some degree of countenance is that it is the only place of seclusion about the town. It is not intended to overthrow the Eye Hospital. I am of opinion that both institutions are absolutely necessary. I think myself that the only way we can ward off the affliction of what is commonly known as a contagious disease is to provide a good hospital in some place where the people are entirely free from the disease. Nothing will be definitely decided upon in regard to the situation until the matter has been thoroughly considered. Everybody who knows anything about the matter must be aware of the fact that there are pariahs in every hospital, and if women of that character are induced to go into a hospital for treatment, and if you have a wish to reclaim them, they must be treated with all the care and sympathy which it is possible to bestow upon them. Now in regard to the second matter, the fact of your asking for £50,000 involves the question of giving the whole amount necessary for the completion of the building, because if the Government grants that sum of money, I consider that is bound to complete the building, whether £130,000 more or £180,000 more is required for the work. In expressing to you my inability at the present moment to comply with your request, it is only just to you that I should fully and frankly explain the reasons which have influenced me in the course which I have felt myself compelled to adopt. I have not, as you will perceive before I finish my remarks, taken this course lightly and unadvisedly. On the contrary, it has been a subject which I have anxiously considered, and upon which I am anxious to obtain counsel and assistance from those who are most qualified to give both. I have for many years held the conviction that the Macquarie-street site is not at all suitable for a large general hospital for the metropolis in accordance with modern ideas of the necessary space arrangements and surroundings of such a building. In the first place I have been long of opinion that no building for general hospital purposes (or for any other than the treatment of cases of accident) should be erected in the very heart of the city. And I have formed this opinion by considering not only the interests of the inmates of such an establishment, but those also of the general community; and neither the welfare of the former nor the safety of the latter can be served by the maintenance of such an establishment in such a situation. Impressed with this conviction, I have naturally had the entire subject of hospital accommodation for the city of Sydney and its neighbourhood forced upon my anxious consideration, and the first practical conclusion at which I have arrived is one which, in my opinion, must form the basis of whatever scheme may be determined upon for providing sufficient hospital accommodation of the best kind. This is the entire administration of our city hospitals under one board. As you are well aware, nearly every hospital in this country receives large aid from the Government in one form or another—that is, either directly, in money grants in building and maintenance, or in liberal payments for what are termed Government patients. It is essential for all purposes of efficiency that the existing system of aiding institutions which are to a certain extent rival, if not antagonistic, should be brought to an end, and that the assistance of the Government should be diverted into a single channel for the purpose of best meeting the urgent and beneficial requirements of the people. I shall explain presently the immediate interest to the patient seeking admission to a public hospital of being placed in communication with a single board having control of all hospital accommodation. Of the necessity of the institution in the interests of the public it is unnecessary to speak. In considering this subject I have endeavoured to ascertain in the first place the number of beds for which provision would have to be made to meet the reasonable requirements of the metropolis and its neighbourhood, and then how these should be apportioned—or, in other words, what would be the different classes of service for which they would be available. These, I apprehend, might be thus classified:—1, emergency or accident cases; 2, cases of ordinary hospital treatment; 3, lying in or maternity hospitals; 4, cases of fever or other malignant and infectious disease; 5, syphilitic diseases of females; 6, convalescent cases; 7, chronic cases, which may continue to be admitted in the Government Hospital. The primary advantage of a single board in our hospital administration would be that the patient would be at once sent to the hospital specially suited for the complaint, and thus the readiest application of the best means of treatment would be ensured. The next gain would be one of economy in expenditure directly consequent upon combined and uniform action and management. Of this I will give but two illustrations:—A patient is suffering, it may be, from some acute ailment requiring much nursing and very careful medical treatment and diet. For his proper treatment he has to be placed in an hospital in which the average cost of maintenance is probably at the rate of from 25s. to 30s. per week. As such a patient gains strength he may be transferred to the convalescent hospital, where the expense per bed is, owing to the smaller nursing staff, and to the degree of self-help which exists on the part of the patient, probably not more than one-half of this amount, while the restoration of the patient to health is facilitated by his removal from the general hospital, and by the very nature of the surroundings in the convalescent institution. Again, a patient is found after a time to be suffering from a chronic ailment which may take months, or even years, of more gentle and careful treatment than can be given in the homes of the poor, and these can be met under a general administration by being removed to what I have called the Chronic Diseases Hospital. The next point arising for consideration is, what should be the situation of these various hospitals, and what ought to be the extent of accommodation provided? With regard to the latter, it is my intention to take steps to obtain the opinions of those qualified by their experience and study to aid me, I now approach the most difficult part of the subject, and my views may not be quite palatable to some present; but I desire at the outset to assure you that I have endeavoured to come to an opinion on the subject apart from all considerations of preference for either the constitution or the management of one hospital over another, or of any personal feelings or sympathies whatever. I have rather considered this matter with the two objects of ascertaining how the interests of the patients and those of the public may be best served. In doing so, I have come to the conclusion that, in point of position, the advantages of a site for a general hospital are very greatly on the side of the Prince Alfred Hospital, which possesses an area of ground much in excess of the Sydney Hospital, and indeed largely beyond the space required, as laid down in 1864 by the Chirurgical Society of Paris as indispensable. The administrative part of this hospital is all provided for, although not all internally fitted, so that the expense of completing it would be limited to the actual pavilion accommodation necessary. The Sydney Hospital, on the other hand, will still require on your own showing a very large sum for its completion. Its plan also is, I understand, regarded by many medical authorities as to a great extent an objectionable one; that is, a building of three stories of wards, which must necessarily in a limited area increase the risk of spreading disease to an alarming extent. Under all these circumstances, I have conceived it to be my duty to put you at once in possession of my views, which you perceive are at the present time opposed to giving the further assistance to the erection and completion of the Sydney Hospital which you ask for. That really implies the agreement to give £130,000 or £150,000, as it would be useless to give £50,000, unless the Government is prepared to complete the buildings. I need not do further than cast a passing glance at the advantages of having the greater control conferred by one board over the obtaining some degree of payment from those able to pay, and who yet so often take advantage of the rivalry that at present exists to get free from all payment. For, while in my opinion the hospitals should ever be freely open to those who are unable to contribute, yet I consider that it would induce a healthier moral condition if those who can contribute something towards the public aid afforded could be compelled to do so. While I state these as my views, formed after much consideration, I have in conclusion to assure you that it will become my duty to lay them before my colleagues, together with all that has been urged by you to-day, in order that some practical decision may be come to with as little delay as possible, of which you will be informed through Dr. Renwick, your president, immediately.

Dr. Renwick then thanked the Colonial Secretary on behalf of the deputation, and they withdrew.

NEW UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS.

A deputation of Professors of the University waited upon the Minister for Public Instruction yesterday to urge upon him the necessity for an immediate application of the sum of £20,000 voted by Parliament for additional buildings in connection with the departments of medicine, natural science, engineering, and modern languages. The deputation consisted of Dr. Badham, Professors Gurney, Liversidge, and Anderson Stuart, and Mr. Barff (Registrar of the University).

Dr. Badham, in stating the objects of the deputation, pointed out that the present accommodation was totally inadequate to the wants of the classes at present carried on, and that the additional classes now being established in the various subjects of the medical and scientific school rendered the necessity for increased space much more urgent.

Professor Liversidge endorsed what Dr. Badham had said with regard to the overcrowding of the class-rooms and their insufficiency for the existing courses of lectures, and pointed out that the increase of students due to the establishment of the new departments would cause still greater inconvenience. He urged the desirableness of proceeding with the new buildings for the medical, natural science, and engineering departments as quickly as possible. He dwelt upon the necessity for a new laboratory. That was a want which had been felt for the last 10 or 11 years. The accommodation was too limited for the present number of students, and was in fact so limited that some students had had to be refused admission. Then, from the fact of the laboratory being in the main building, it was a great source of danger to it from fire or explosion.

Professor Gurney, in alluding to the overcrowding of the University, said that the two rooms used as libraries had to be in daily use as classrooms, one for modern languages, and the other for natural history and classics. The only room at the disposal of the lecturer in engineering was a small ante-room to the chemical lecture-room. The mathematical lecturer had been obliged to make use of the great hall for daily classes. A steady increase had been maintained in the number of students for the last six years, and there was every prospect of a more rapid addition to their numbers in future.

Professor Anderson Stuart urged the necessity of at once commencing operations in the way of commencing operations in the way of providing accommodation for the medical school. It would be found that the medical school would steadily increase in numbers by rapid strides. That was beyond doubt. From inquiries he had made he knew of at least 12 students who proposed to enter next year, thus making 19 students in the second year, in addition to others who would doubtless enter. It should not be forgotten that the accommodation for the lectures must be very much the same for a small number as for a large number in a class. The working needs would be practically constant, and the only difference would be in the space required. There was, therefore, no ground for delaying the making of proper provision for accommodation for the medical classes until the school increased in numbers. The school was now located in temporary buildings which would be altogether insufficient next year, more so the succeeding year, and still more so the next again, since each year new courses of instruction would be commenced until the curriculum was in full operation in the beginning of 1886. He regarded the building of additional temporary structures as to a great extent a waste of public money, and therefore thought that the sooner the permanent building was completed the better for the school and the more economical for the country.

The Hon. Mr. Reid expressed great pleasure at receiving a deputation of professors from the University, which he fully recognised as the crown of the whole educational system of the colony. It was a new thing to hear that the lecture-rooms were overcrowded, and a most gratifying piece of information to himself and to the public at large, he was sure. He fully recognised the urgency for the new buildings, and said that he would do everything in his power to hurry on so necessary a work.

THE WATERLOO PUBLIC SCHOOL.

A deputation, introduced by Mr. John Sutherland, M.L.A., and consisting of the Mayor of Waterloo and Aldermen Evans, Brutnall, and Anderson, waited upon the Minister of Public Instruction (Hon. G. H. Reid) yesterday to urge the desirableness of at once proceeding with the erection of a permanent school building on land on Gardener's-road, Waterloo, and of securing for school purposes certain land fronting the Botany-road. It was pointed out that a tender for a permanent school building was accepted 12 months ago, but the erection of the place was not being proceeded with. A temporary schoolroom had been erected, but it did not afford sufficient accommodation for the children who should attend school, and, moreover, in winter the place was very cold.

Mr. Reid said he thought that if the present temporary building were extended, or a new classroom provided, it might meet the requirements of the locality for some time. At the present time the Department was overwhelmed with applications for schools in places where at present there were no means of education of any kind whatever. In view of that being the case, he found very great difficulty at the present moment in authorising the erection of expensive buildings where school buildings which were fairly adequate to the requirements of the place existed; and that was the case with Waterloo. He felt that after providing those temporary means, which were new and cost some money, he could not just now proceed with the erection of that building. He had just now so many urgent claims from places which were not at present provided with schools, and applications of that kind must be dealt with first. He had been considering the whole question of public expenditure on school buildings, and he felt that it would require a very searching investigation. He was afraid a great deal of money was being spent recklessly. He intended to take steps to thoroughly inform himself upon that matter as to the expenditure which was being incurred, to see if the Government could not administer the Department with a little more economy. In some districts expensive buildings had been put up, but since their erection the population had left and the buildings were deserted. In considering applications for the erection of school buildings in future a distinction would have to be made between places where the population was permanent, as was the case at Waterloo, and places where the population was of a floating character. The Department was pressed with a large number of applications, but the fact was that the funds which were available were entirely pledged, and he would not feel justified in giving Waterloo new permanent school buildings. At the same time the Department was prepared to make the existing school as comfortable as possible, by finishing the temporary buildings. Mr. Sutherland thanked the Minister for his candour, and said that on another occasion he would not be able to complain of the want of funds, as he would do all he could to see that a sufficiently large sum was voted for such purposes.

NORTH SHORE REQUIREMENTS.

A deputation, appointed at a conference of the Municipal Councils of St. Leonards, East St. Leonards, Victoria, and North Willoughby, waited upon the Minister for Public Works (Mr. F. A. Wright) yesterday to make representations with respect to various matters relating to North Shore. The deputation, which was accompanied by the Hon. G. R. Dibbs, and Messrs. Hollermann, Cass, Dalton, and Withers, Ms.L.A., asked that a line of railway might be constructed from the line from Homebush to Waratah (from Pearce's corner) to St. Leonards; for a tramway from North Shore to near the spit in Middle Harbour; for a system of sewage by having the present surface drainage flushed with salt water, a reservoir for that purpose to be constructed on the highest part of St. Leonards; and for an improved steam ferry to be at once established.

The Hon. F. A. Wright stated that the day after he took office he gave instructions for a line of railway to be surveyed from Pearce's Corner to St. Leonards, and the surveyors were still at work. In regard to the tramway, the Government were losing no time in the matter. Plans had been prepared showing three routes, one starting from Lavender Bay and two from Milson's Point. No route had been definitely decided upon, but it seemed to him that the best one would be from Milson's Point, as that was the centre of most of the traffic. No motors could, however, carry the traffic up the heavy gradients between the waterside and the Military-road, so that to conduct the traffic a wire-rope tram would have to be made. An engineer of the Department (Mr. Downe) had been sent to America in order to (among other purposes) obtain the latest information as to the construction and working of the wire-rope system of tramways, and he expected that information upon that subject would be to hand shortly. He thought that the residents of North Shore had no reason to complain that the Government had neglected them, inasmuch as there had been voted a sum of £40,000 for a steam ferry, &c. Plans had been prepared for that work locally, but as American engineers had had so much experience in that matter, the Government thought it desirable to consult them; and instructions had been sent to America for plans, &c., to be prepared. Those plans would arrive shortly, and would be compared with the local ones, and the work would then be carried out on the best design. He was opposed to the proposal to have a saltwater reservoir constructed at St. Leonards for the purpose of flushing the drains. Even if the Government provided the reservoir, the council would have to pay for the reticulation of the pipes for the distribution of the water, and that would involve a cost beyond the power of any municipality; and then if that work were carried out an evil would be created by the silt being carried into the harbour. Other suburbs just as important as North Shore had no system of sewerage. The Government proposed to carry out as early as possible an extensive system of sewerage, the sewerage to be subjected to a deodorising process, and the comparatively clear water which would be left would be passed into Middle Harbour. North Shore would be provided for in that scheme.

AMENDMENT OF THE ELECTORAL LAWS.

A deputation from the Trades and Labour Council, introduced by Mr. J. Garrard, M.L.A., waited upon the Colonial Secretary yesterday, to urge upon that gentleman the desirableness of making various amendments in the electoral laws. The propositions of the deputation were as follows:—1. That polling booths should be open from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. 2. That electorates should be divided into wards, and each ward have a polling booth. 3. That all seamen belonging to the port who had been connected with the colony for 12 months should have the right to exercise the franchise. 4. That general elections should be heard upon one day. 5. That some improvement is required in the manner of collecting electors' names.

Mr. Stuart replied that all the subjects referred to would be taken into careful consideration when the Government undertook the amendment of the electoral law.

IMMIGRATION OF SERVANTS.

Messrs. Knibbs and Haigh waited upon the Colonial Secretary yesterday, to ask that gentleman to approve of a scheme of immigration in accordance with which engagements of servant girls might be entered into in this colony, and such engagements ratified in England, and the servants brought out as immigrants.

Mr. Stuart replied to the effect that he considered that the necessary machinery was already provided by the Agreements Validating Act, if the deputation chose to take advantage of the provisions of that measures.

THE SITE OF THE BENEVOLENT ASYLUM.

A deputation of the board of directors of the Benevolent Asylum, introduced by Messrs. Poole and Abigail, Ms.L.A., waited upon the Colonial Secretary yesterday, with a view to ascertaining whether it was the intention of the Government to resume the site of the Benevolent Asylum for railway purposes.

Mr. Stuart replied that he was at present unable to state what were the intentions of the Government with respect to the site of that institution, but he would give a definite reply to the inquiry of the deputation before 4 o'clock on Thursday next.

FIRE BRIGADES BILL.

A deputation, consisting of a number of representatives of Volunteer Fire Brigades, was introduced to the Colonial Secretary yesterday by Messrs. Abigail and Butcher, Ms.L.A. The deputation urged upon the Colonial Secretary the desirableness of as soon as possible after the reassembling of Parliament re-introducing the Fire Brigades Bill which he brought forward last session with such an alteration of the provisions of the measure as would give the Volunteer Fire Brigades the power to nominate one of the members of the board to be entrusted with the management of affairs relating to fires.

Mr. Stuart said he intended to again bring forward the bill, but before submitting it he would fully consider the representations of the deputation.

VOLUNTEER COMPANY FOR MANLY.

A deputation appointed at a public meeting held at Manly recently waited upon the Colonial Secretary yesterday to make certain representations with respect to a Volunteer Rifle Company which it was desired to establish at Manly. The deputation consisted of Messrs. W. J. Small, James Day, Percy Rowse, and Cooper, and was accompanied by the Hon. G. R. Dibbs and Mr. B. O. Holtermann, M.L.A. Mr. Small said their reasons for wishing to form a Volunteer Rifle Corps at Manly Beach were—first, that its formation and maintenance would be of benefit to the community at large; and secondly, to the individuals comprising it. Such a corps would be of benefit to the community at large, because Manly would form a most inviting vantage point of possession to an enemy, and in case of attack its occupation would probably be early attempted. A corps at Manly would form an outlying piquet to Sydney on an exposed flank and always at its post. A corps such as that proposed would also be able to at any rate temporarily check the advance of troops, and by doing so, give timely warning to the batteries at Middle and George's Heads. It was thought its formation would be of benefit to the individuals comprising it, because drill would improve them physically, and a degree of control would also have a beneficial effect morally and socially. To enable the deputation and those whom they represented to succeed in their object, they would require—1. The use of the old Public school premises as an orderly room, armoury, drill ground, &c. 2. The services of a drill instructor 3. Arms and accoutrements, and facilities for purchasing ammunition for same. 4. Butts and targets. 5. Uniform. As Manly was a place of small population, the deputation did not expect the company, for some time at any rate, to be a large one, but desired respectfully to express their opinion that by adopting a liberal treatment of the members, such as affording them in their orderly room the privileges of a military club, and granting them local inspections, &c., the corps might easily be made a very effective one. The deputation came before the Colonial Secretary with some diffidence, their numbers being so small; but when they thought of the exposed position of their little township, and considered the fact that it was, as it were, one of the keys of Port Jackson, they thought they should fail in their duty did they not place their services at the disposal of the country.

Mr. Small handed to the Premier a list containing the names of 75 persons who had expressed their willingness to join the proposed corps.

Mr. Stuart said he understood that they asked to be received as a purely Volunteer force.

Mr. Small: Purely volunteer. We require nothing for our services whatever; but as most of the men are working men we don't want them to be put to any expense.

Mr. Stuart said he understood that it was desired that the Government should find them in clothing and accoutrements and instruction in drill, and also to find butts. The Government had received the services of one or two corps in different parts of the country upon those principles; one was, he thought, at Ulladulla, and another at Mudgee. A number of men at Kiama also applied to be received as a purely Volunteer force, but they afterwards wanted to be paid, and then withdrew their offer. The Government had agreed to accept the services of the corps previously mentioned and to find them in clothing and arms, and to provide drill instruction for them. There would, he thought, be no difficulty in doing the same with regard to Manly. He might point out, however, that the Act provided the mode in which they must proceed in order to be constituted a Volunteer corps. They would have to make an offer of their services through the Commandant to the Governor; it was not a matter of Ministerial arrangement at all. The Governor, as Commander-in-Chief, received through the Commandant the application, and it was for his Excellency to say whether, on behalf of the Crown, he would receive their services or not. No doubt his Excellency was guided by the advice which he received from the Minister, but it did not come before the Government as a Ministerial thing. As soon, however, as the preliminary steps which he had indicated had been taken, and they had satisfied the Commandant, then the Government would be prepared to aid to the best of their ability to provide for the instruction of the corps in drill, and, if possible, drill instruction. He had caused to be held in abeyance a proposal to sell an old schoolroom at Manly in order that he might see whether the place would be suitable for a drillroom, and whether they might be granted the use of that building.

Mr. Small said that the names of the proposed members of the corps had been forwarded to the Commandant, and that he (Mr. Small) was afraid that if drill accommodation was not provided it would be no use starting the corps. It was expected that the men should get something for their time, that something being in the form of an orderly room where, when it was it was not a drill night, the men might be exercised at single-stick. The men would not want for single-sticks and masks, or anything of that sort, as those things would be provided by hon. members. It was intended that it should be a sort of club as well as Volunteer corps.

The Hon. G. R. Dibbs, who said he did not want to throw cold water on the movement, explained why a force which was purely a Volunteer force had not been found to work satisfactorily.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I am informed by a tolerably reliable authority that those last importations from the old country—Messrs. Kavanagh and Co.—whose presence has created such a flutter at Adelaide and Melbourne, are really coming to Sydney. It is extremely likely, whether they are intended for us or not, that they will contrive to find their way here. These blessings generally do. We are a soft, good-natured, easy going old sort in this "Queen City" of ours, and we take them in and do for them with most edifying philanthropy. What does it matter if, like the man in the fable, who warmed up the frozen viper and got warmed up by it himself, we get a taste of the quality of these worthies? We are a peculiar people. To prevent rinderpest in our herds we stop the importation of cattle; to improve the moral condition of the people, we restrict the influx of Chinamen; to avert public calamities we pass sundry Acts of Parliament; yet when Mr. John Bull proposes, in his clumsy way, to shoot his rubbish and infuse his ruffianism into our midst, we are coolly told there is no law to prevent it. Well, if there be no enacted law to save us from the danger and the degradation out of which we have not too long emerged, let us have it quickly. Meanwhile, if the Invincible gentlemen who propose to make Sydney their base of operations in the delicate schemes by which they hope to work out the regeneration of poor misgoverned Ireland, do attempt a foothold in this loyal and humane community, let our Government, with that same admirable firmness which is displayed in Victoria, resolve at once that here they shall not remain. I do not advocate the contemptible expediency of passing them on. Let them be sent back whence they came, without our thanks.

The presence of these quasi-criminals raises up a nice point of courtesy—let us not say of law. I leave that to Mr. Dalley. What can we think of the kindness and consideration of the Government in England who, with a diplomacy worthy only of Scotland Yard, ships off this precious cargo without a particle of invoice or advice; and, with true John Bull shrewdness, to ensure its freedom from detection, or perhaps its safety, all in one bottom.

Sir, a human pariah hounded through the world is a sad spectacle, and I write with regret; but the crimes we have read of in Ireland seem to close the springs of sympathy, and it is impossible to extend in the case of these men that welcome we are, as a rule, only too glad to give to all who come to this as to a promised land.

I am, &c., VINDEX.

COMMERCIAL.

WOOL, PRODUCE, AND STOCK REPORT.

Wool.—No public sales have been held this week, and there is nothing to indicate any new feature in the market.

Sheepskins.—There is nothing to report under this head, in the absence of auction and other business.

Hides.—5700 submitted yesterday, and 4980 were sold. The supply being lighter than usual, the market was firmer, and the news received of the somewhat stronger English market will tend to strengthen values. Extra heavies quoted at 4d. to 4½d.; medium, 3¾d. to 3¼d.; light, from 3¼d.

Tallow.—395 packages were offered at yesterday's sales, and 325 were sold. For prime shipping lots there was a good demand at late rates; other lots were scarcely so firm. Best beef sold at £34 to £35 5s.; prime mutton, £36 to £36 5s.

Horns and Bones.—At last auction sales previous rates were fully maintained; an exceptionally good lot of picked horns bringing 40s., but for ordinary lots of large size 25s. to 35s. may be quoted; inferior from 5s. Bones worth from £3 to £9; exceptional lots sell to £10.

Hair.—Horse tail is worth 14d. to 18d.; mane, 9d. to 11d.; cow, 4d. to 1s. 3d., with a good demand for all descriptions.

Beeswax sells readily at 8½d. to 10½d. per lb.

Leather.—Good lots of dressed leather were in fair demand; and for harness and bridle the competition was moderately good. But other kinds of leather were dull of sale at the auction rooms on Tuesday. The catalogues were cleared at the following prices:—Kip, 11d. to 18½d.; American kip, 13½d.; sole, 8d. to 10d.; damaged, from 5d.; calf, 8d. to 30d.; French calf, 31½d.; harness, 10d. to 13d.; shoulders, 6d. to 7d.; strapping, 4d. to 6d.; yearling, 16d. to 24d.; tweed, 13d. to 24d.; bridle, 7s. to 11d.; bag, 6s. to 12s.; kangaroo, 18d. to 24d.; basils, 4s. to 12s. 6d.

Store Cattle.—For good store bullocks there is a fair demand, but inferior cattle are dull of sale. £3 to £3 12s. 6d. may be quoted as values of bullocks according to condition; mixed herds, 30s. to 40s.

Store Sheep.—Owing to the continuance of dry weather store sheep are not much sought after, and there are comparatively few sales. Ewes are worth 10s. to 12s. 6d.; wethers, from 8s. to 9s.; off shears, the price is from 2s. to 3s. less.

Stations.—Business is far from active. The Coobang and Coobang West stations have changed hands during the week, and other stations are under offer.

MESSRS. BRUNKER AND WOLFE'S REPORT.

PROPERTY SALES.

Messrs. HORSE MARKET.

Mr. George Kiss.—Horses of all kinds have been plentiful for this time of the year, and prices obtained I considered good; the greater portion consisted of saddle and light harness and pairs of harness horses, several of which came from the Southern and Western districts, and sold at satisfactory prices. The quantity of heavy draught horses to hand this week was somewhat limited, although the demand has not been less than last week, quotations for which are much about the same. Carriage pairs are as valuable as ever, but most difficult to obtain. My quotations are as follows—Heavy draught, from £30 to £50; light draught and van horses, £15 to £27; saddle and light harness horses, £15 to £40; hacks, £10 to £25; carriage pairs, £50 to £100. In vehicles a good amount of business was done, and the prices realised for the various kinds brought under the hammer were satisfactory. There was a good demand for first-class cows, those disposed of realising from £5 to £14 5s, without guarantee.

Messrs. William Inglis and Co.—The market was well supplied with horses the past week, especially from the New Zealand ports, most of which were very superior animals, and all brought top market prices, as will be seen by the condensed summary of our sale as follows:—Black stallion, £252; bay stallion, £315; bay stallion, £326 10s; brown stallion, £315; extra heavy draught mares, 16 head, from £80 to £126; 17 head, from £50 to £70; 40 mares and geldings, from £40 to £60; 32 draught horses, £28 to £40; 38 cart horses, £20 to £28; 27 harness horses, £10 to £15; 26 light harness horses, £5 to £10; 28 horses, very light, from £1 to £5.

T. Cosgrove and Co.—The market continues very firm for every class of useful animal, the supply forward good, and competition for each lot worthy of note keen. We had a fine lot of draught and buggety carthorses forward. The former reached £40, and the latter sold up to £37. Active van horses brought £18 to £30; buggy horses from £30 to £52 10s.; buggy pairs up to £75; saddle and harness horses, £5 to £55; springcart and other saddle and light harness horses, £7 to £12. Milking cows, from £5 to £12 10s. The usual number of vehicles and turnouts of various kinds changed hands at satisfactory prices.

KATOOMBA.

J. B. NORTH'S SUBDIVISION.

THE FIRST BIG SALE OF THE SEASON.

HARDIE and GORMAN have received instructions from the Owner, J. B. North, Esq., to sell by PUBLIC AUCTION, at THE GREAT WESTERN HOTEL, KATOOMBA, on an EARLY DATE,
A MAGNIFICENT FREEHOLD BUILDING ESTATE, ripe for immediate development, situate within about 5 minutes' walk of the RAILWAY STATION, and possessing
ONE MILE OF FRONTAGE TO THE RAILWAY
and the MAIN BATHURST ROAD, comprising many beautiful sites for the erection of residences of a superior class, commanding exquisite views of the surrounding charmingly undulating country extending for miles, while the many natural advantages which this choice property possesses renders it especially favourable for business sites and building purposes.
THE ESTATE will be divided into numerous and convenient lots to suit the requirements of all kinds of purchasers, each lot having an ample frontage to a good road
KATOOMBA is destined to become a centre of industry. It is rich in mineral wealth, in fireclay, kerosene shale, iron ore, and coal.
Mr. J. B. North's well-known coal mine, situated at Katoomba Vale, has been constructed at a cost of over £23,500, and now affords employment for some 70 hands, and is turning out from five to eight hundred tons of coal per week; but the machinery is capable of producing 500 tons of coal per day.
The timber trade is represented by a sawmill, for which there appears to be ample scope, there being an inexhaustible supply of turpentine, blue gum, ash, beech, and other timbers. Kerosene shale is also found in the neighbourhood.
Fire and pottery clay form part of the natural wealth of the place. A fine white stone is another element of local wealth, and for purity of colour and closeness of grain its equal does not exist in any other part of the colony.
THE GREAT WESTERN HOTEL, containing 67 entertaining rooms, just completed, and which is to be opened early this month, stands on a hill in the immediate vicinity of this Estate, and forms one of the most conspicuous and imposing buildings on the mountains. This establishment will doubtless do much to open up the vast resources of the Hartley district. There are several very pretty gentlemen's residences here and there, while in the township there are public buildings.

Lot 2 consists of a block of land half a mile from the above, containing 40 acres, being part of Mildwater's grant, on which is erected which only wants furnishing to become a choice family residence. The land extends on each side of the Pittwater-road from Curl Curl Creek.
A LARGE STONE HOUSE,

Lot 3 consists of a choice and carefully-selected BLOCK of 100 ACRES, admirably adapted for market gardens or for subdivision, situate adjacent to the Pittwater-road, and partly intersected by the same. It is about three miles from Manly Beach.

Lot 4 consists of 2 BLOCKS of 24 ACRES and 51 ACRES respectively, originally granted to Alexander Park, 75 acres in all. These lots will be sold separately, and are situated about a mile off the Pittwater-road on the high land above, and command a magnificent view of the ocean and surrounding country, and are well worth the attention of speculators, as they are sure to go cheap.

Lot 5 consists of a BLOCK of 24 ACRES, originally granted to W. Redman, and on the very top of Rodborough Heights. The situation of this block is charming.

Lot 6 comprises 3 GRANTS to W. Redman of 20 ACRES, 20 ACRES, and 18 ACRES, 58 acres in all, to be sold separately, well situate on and near to Burnet Bridge Creek, and adjoining D. Wentworth's 380-acre grant. This is a really choice position.

Lot 7 comprises 3 GRANTS to W. T. Cape of 25 ACRES, 32½ acres, 22 acres, 20 acres and 18½ acres respectively, 107½ acres in all, adjoining the above; all to be sold separately. The situation of these lands is superb, and they are well worthy of inspection.

Lot 8. The allotments on the Clontarf Heights Estate, situate close to the ferry across Middle Harbour, and just behind the Middle Harbour Church, consisting of 5 lots fronting M'Millan-street; 14 lots fronting Peacock-street, and 12 lots fronting Alleyne-street; 31 lots in all. For further particulars see small lithos.

Lot 9. Sundry allotments in the Brighton Heights Estate, situate on and near the Main Sydney-road, about a mile from Sydney, consisting of section 1, lots 1, 8, 9, and 10; section 2, lots 1, 2, 5, 7, 9, 10, and 14; and section 3, lots 3 and 11; 13 lots in all. See small lithos.

Lot 10. 12 blocks on the Wentworth Estate, selected by Mr. Redman at the subdivision sale, consisting of Lots 6 and 7, in area 15a. 1r. 5p.
9, 10, and 11, in area 15a.
31 to 36 inclusive, 33a.
37 and 38, in area 17a. 1r. 37p.,
comprising about
80 ACRES IN ALL.
These were chosen after a careful inspection of the estate, and will be sold in consecutive order. See special Litho.

Lot 11. Half-interest in M'Eveley's grant, of 10 acres 2 roods 13 perches, situate fronting and on both sides of the Main Sydney and Manly Roads. This is a splendid block for subdivision, and the purchaser is certain to do well with his purchase.

Lot 12.—WILKINSON'S GRANT, 12a. 1r. 1p., situate adjoining the above, and also adjacent to Alleyne's grant recently sold as a subdivision on the ground. This block also fronts, and is intersected by the Main Sydney and Manly Road, and if subdivided and sold in lots on the ground would realise much more than Alleyne's.

The Auctioneers are happy to be able to announce that they have succeeded in arranging admirably suitable terms, so that speculators may buy at this sale, and make a few thousands, viz.:—
25 per cent. deposit
25 per cent. in 3 months
25 per cent. in 6 months

MORT and CO., Limited, have received instructions to sell by public auction, at the Sale Room of their Wool Warehouses, Circular Quay, Sydney, on TUESDAY, 28th August, 1883, at half-past 2 o'clock p.m.,
Those choice properties, which will be sold separately,
1. ARRAMAGONG EAST, situated about 22 miles from Young and 15 miles from Grenfell, containing about 664½ acres freehold land, 4893 acres C. P. land, and 3789 acres leasehold.
2. WATERVIEW, situated about 9 miles from Young, containing about 2783 acres C. P. land.
3. SOLFERINO, situated about 7 miles from Young, containing about 80 acres freehold and 1748½ acres C. P. land.
The improvements are extensive, comprising comfortable HOMESTEAD, stabling, sheep-drafting yards, huts, &c., and a great extent of fencing, dividing each property into numerous paddocks.
The salubrious climate and accessible situation of these properties in the midst of a celebrated sheep-breeding district render this a most favourable opportunity to those on the look-out for desirable stud flock estates.
An inspection of the properties is invited, and further particulars may be obtained on application to the proprietor, CARLO MARINA, Esq., Moppity, Young; F. A. BROCK, Young; or from MORT and CO., Limited, Sydney.

QUEENSLAND STATION.

RICHARD GIBSON and CO. have received instructions from Mr. Joseph Lunn to sell by auction (through their auctioneer), in conjunction with J. T. C. RANKEN and CO., of Bourke, at MENZIES' HOTEL, MELBOURNE,
on FRIDAY, 7th SEPTEMBER NEXT,
at 3 o'clock,
The HUDDERSFIELD STATION,
situated in the South Gregory district of Queensland, containing an area of 220,160 acres of Crown lands, together with 1500 CATTLE
500 SHEEP
80 HORSES.
The country consists of high undulating mulga and gidya open country, here and there intercepted by stony ridges, thickly covered with various descriptions of fattening grasses and many varieties of saline and other edible herbs. A portion is also composed of high sandhills and well grassed flats, having on the flats blue and Mitchell grass, as well as cotton and saltbush.
There are five blocks, viz., Dingera, Dingera North, Tinders, Merry Morey, and North Merry Morey. The two latter are not contiguous to the other three, being some 25 miles south of them.
The facilities for conserving water are abundant, for besides Dingera Creek, which runs through the centre of the two blocks of that name, there are several holes in it that can stand a drought of some six or eight months duration, and with a trifling expenditure could be rendered permanent. There are also several minor tributaries to the creek which could be dammed. Warry Warry Creek runs through the western portion of Tinders, and also through Merry Morey block, and on both Merry Morey and North Merry Morey there are plenty of good natural water catches, where rain, with a moderate expenditure, could readily be conserved.
Improvements consist of a house, cattle yards, well of sweet water, struck at a depth of 90 feet, which yields a good supply of water.
The cattle are well bred, of mixed ages and sexes; amongst them are quite 400 between three and four years old, and in good condition.
For further particulars apply to the agents.

SOUTH GREGORY DISTRICT, QUEENSLAND.

THYLUNGRA and BUNGINDERRY STATIONS.

AREA about 1,080,000 ACRES.

GRIFFITHS and WEAVER (with M'Dermott, Loughnan, and Scarr) are instructed by Mr. Patrick Durack to sell by auction, in Melbourne, at Menzies' Hotel, at 2.30 p.m., on FRIDAY, AUGUST 31, 1883, his unequalled fattening runs, known as which comprise 31 adjoining blocks, with an estimated area (since survey) of 1697¾ square miles, or 1,087,560 acres of open saltbush plains, with fine grassy downs, intersected in places by some lightly-timbered Mulga ridges and a few lines of sandhills.

The whole run is admirably adapted for a sheep station, the herbage and grasses being unsurpassed.

The Kyabra Creek, to which the run has a frontage of 45 miles on each side, with its tributaries, also Bunginderry and other creeks, and six dams, afford a never-failing supply of water.

THYLUNGRA lies 350 miles west of the Mitchell Railway Station, and about the same distance N.W. of Bourke; also 100 miles north of Thargomindah, to which it is proposed to extend the railway from Mitchell. The station is not interfered with by any of the railway extensions.

The IMPROVEMENTS, which are complete for working the property, include extensive homestead, dairy, garden, &c., &c., also houses for overseers and men, seven stockyards, and several large paddocks enclosed by 24 miles of wire fence.

With the property will be sold the whole of the herd of cattle. About 18,400 head. Also, Horses, Stores, Plant, &c.

The Auctioneers will at the same time and place dispose of Mr. Durack's other properties, comprising—

LOT 2. GALWAY DOWNS, situated about 10 miles above the junction of the Barcoo and Thompson Rivers, the area of which is about 362 Square Miles, of rich fattening saltbush plains and downs, watered by about 35 miles frontage to the main river, with 5000 CATTLE and 30 horses; also stores, plant, &c. This station has all necessary improvements and accommodation.

LOT 3. SULTAN STATION, situated on Thunda Creek, in the same district, which has an area of about 150 square miles of the finest class of sheep country. To be sold with about 12,000 mixed sheep. This STATION is improved as required.

Auctioneers desire to draw special attention to the sale of these properties, which are acknowledged to be second to none in the colonies for the quality of the country, their carrying capabilities, both for sheep and cattle, and the admirable way in which they are watered. The stations have acquired so high a reputation for the quality of their fat stock, and the prices realised at Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide sale yards, that comment on them is unnecessary. There will be about 3000 to 5000 head of fat cattle ready for market within a few months.

LIBERAL TERMS OF SALE.

For plans and further particulars, apply to GRIFFITHS and WEAVER, Sydney, MACDERMOTT, LOUGHNAN, and SCARR, Sydney, Melbourne, and Rockhampton.

The whole is well watered by Nyrang and Gum Creeks, with an abundance of fattening grasses, 4-roomed cottage and outbuildings, sheep yards, &c., 70 acres cleared and fenced. The soil is of the best description for either agricultural or grazing purposes.

Terms, half cash; balance 6, 12, and 18 on approved bills.

The auctioneers call particular attention to the sale of this property, situated, as it is, in one of the best fattening districts of the colony, and adjoining a large Government reserve; it being now abundantly grassed and permanently watered, improvements fully completed and valued at £800, and everything perfect to make it one of the most comfortable and profitable homesteads in the Western district. Circumstances over which the owner has no control compels him to sell to the highest bidder.

BURKE, COULSON, and NAYLOR.

CAUTION TO PURCHASERS.
The value of this well-known Family Medicine has been largely tested in all parts of the world, and by all grades of society, for upwards of FIFTY YEARS. Its well-earned extensive sale has induced SPURIOUS IMITATIONS, some of which, in OUTWARD APPEARANCE, so closely resemble the original as to have deceived many purchasers. The proprietor, therefore, feels it due to the public to give a special caution against the use of such imitations.
Purchasers are therefore requested carefully to observe the four following distinctive characteristics, without which none are genuine:—
1. In every case the words JOHN STEEDMAN, Chemist, Walworth, Surrey, are engraved on the Government stamp affixed to EACH PACKET.
2. Each SINGLE POWDER has directions for the dose, and the words "John Steedman, chemist, Walworth, Surrey," printed thereon.

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED } Cough.

READ, Sufferers from Cough and Bronchitis, the following letter from the Rev. Horace Roberts, D.D.:—"Dear Sir,—A few years ago I addressed a letter to you in commendation of your famous old cough remedy, and having since known its efficacy as superior to any other preparation, I consider it to be merely a public duty to certify, as the experience of my own family and friends, to the value of the Balsam of Aniseed as the cheapest and best remedy for coughs and colds.—Yours, faithfully, H. ROBERTS, Olney, Bucks.—To Mr. Thos. Powell, Albion-place, Blackfriars-road, London."

EXTRAORDINARY CURE OF A COUGH.
"H.M. Gunboat Netley, Wick, Scotland.
"Dear Sir,—Having had a most distressing and severe cough, which caused me many sleepless nights and restless days, I was recommended by his Lordship the Earl of Caithness to try your most valuable Balsam of Aniseed, and I can assure you with the first dose I found immediate relief, even without having to suspend my various duties, and the first small bottle completely cured me. Therefore I have the greatest confidence in fully recommending it to the million.
(Signed) "W. LINZELL."

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED.
The following letter has been received by Mr. T. Powell from Wm. Boards, Esq., an agriculturalist and land agent, residing at Nightingale Hall, Edmonton:—
"Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy out of many I resorted to could allay. My head was constantly aching, and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balsam of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, just warm. The effect was immediate: it arrested the tickling in my chest. I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long-standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured. For coughs, colds, shortness of breath, asthma, tickling in the throat, and all pulmonary affections, this medicine will be found invaluable. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,
"WM. BOARDS.
"To Mr. Thomas Powell."

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED.
"Sir,—I have for a long time suffered from a severe cough, and tried all manner of remedies. Dr. Liebrecht advised POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED. It cured me after a few days. You are at liberty to use this letter in hopes that others may benefit by it.
"I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

DUC DE MONTABOR WRITES:—
"Chateau de Montabor, Aveyron.
"Sir,—Having suffered for some time from an obstinate cough, accompanied with fever, continuous headaches, and sleepless nights, I resolved, after having vainly tried several other medicines, to have recourse to your BALSAM OF ANISEED. I cannot resist, Sir, the desire of making you acquainted with the really marvellous results which I derived from it. From the first dose I felt great relief, the bad symptoms grew feebler, the irritation of the throat was calming down, and I recovered the sleep which nearly left me. The third dose delivered me completely, and I am now completely restored to health.
"Receive, Sir, with the expression of my gratitude, the assurance of my distinguished sentiments.
"DUC DE MONTABOR."

LOOSENS THE PHLEGM IMMEDIATELY.
The Dean of Westminster's Verger writes:—"I was advised to try the Balsam of Aniseed; I did, and have found very great relief. It is most comforting in allaying irritation and giving strength to the voice."
Lionel Brough, Esq., the eminent actor, writes:—"I think it an invaluable medicine for members of my profession, and have always recommended it to my brother and sister artistes."

THE EFFECT OF ONE TEASPOONFUL taken in a little water on going to bed is EXTRAORDINARY. No family should be without it.

JAMES H. ADGER, Dermatologist.
Office: 131, Elizabeth-st., Sydney.
treats successfully all diseases of the skin and scalp, loss of hair, premature blanching, and general cultivation and growth of the hair; and, as a result of this experience, he may point to his flattering success during several years' practice in this city, without reference to the many special cures he has effected, as the best proof of the general efficiency of his system of treatment.
Mr. Adger may be consulted at his office, 131, Elizabeth-street, where letters and testimonials are open to inspection, which must satisfy the most sceptical, signed as they are by persons of the highest positions in society. It will be obvious that no person could have obtained such names as an endorsement of his professional ability without constant proof of merit.
